The University of Massachusetts is many things to the more than 18,000 undergraduates who attend the school in any given year. An academic environment, a place to party and a home away from home come to mind when describing a university where most of us spend from two to four years preparing for the "real world". Learning to express oneself and accept differences of style and opinion in others are perhaps the most important abilities students can take with them when they leave the University.

People frequently have their hands full when trying to deal with life at UMass.

As with any large school, UMass has problems related to its size. Waiting lines are common, especially in the dining commons and the Hatch, the Financial Aid and Bursar's offices and in the Textbook Annex. Registration for classes can be difficult, with over-subscribed courses prevalent in the business, computers, journalism, communications, and economics departments. Off-campus housing is scarce and every fall there are hundreds of students who must live in swing space until rooms open up in dormitories.

Vendors and other groups sometimes give balloons to students as a way of advertising products or performances.

Inscribed on the statue of Metawampe is "Legendary Spirit of the Redmen." It was given to the University by the class of 1950 and erected by the class of 1956.

The Top of the Campus Lounge offers a quieter atmosphere and a nicer view than most of the area's bars.

Willy's Rathskeller, also known as the Drake, was a beloved dive that closed down on May 31, 1985.

However, the number of students also has many positive aspects. There is always something to do, such as movies, dances, concerts, distinguished speakers, plays, and art exhibits, that one would not encounter at a smaller school. If a person is not interested in on-campus entertainment, the area's bars and nightclubs offer another outlet for socializing.

Even at a school the size of UMass, it is not difficult to make and maintain friendships.

This senior, like others at any outdoor festivity, partakes in a favorite college pastime.

Every year, at least one person wades or swims through the pond.

In recent surveys by the Student Affairs Research & Evaluation Office, 91.4% of those attending UMass stated that they were satisfied or very satisfied with their college experience, but 56.4% were dissatisfied or very dissatisfied with the food services. Almost half of the underclass students lives in Southwest, and of upperclass students, over half reside off-campus.

The campus offers a variety of activities and outlets for expression of ideas and promoting causes. Sports and organizations foster unity and help develop skills necessary for the job market. Student activism once again became prominent. Rallies, demonstrations, and sit-ins aimed at the administration resulted in saving the Campus Center Board of Governors and worked toward divestment in South Africa.

Is this the fun part?

Sylvan offers a unique style of living to UMass students. Each suite provides a home, friendships and more of a family atmosphere than can be found elsewhere on campus. Since each suite has a lounge and a bathroom, the residents can create a truly personalized environment. Sylvan residents have an open door policy so that neighbors can feel free to get together.

Sylvan Area Government sponsors a variety of programs and activities for the residents of the area. The area has a darkroom, craftroom, weightroom and cultural society. The area government also sponsors an Annual Sylvan Day. Last year the area rocked all day at a barbeque in the quad and the party continued with a late night dance at the Bluewall. The East Side Concert in the spring, sponsored by all four East Side Area governments, was rained out.

But Sylvan offers much more than parties and good times. Most of all it is a unique way to live, laugh, smile and make friends: friends who will share your life and love you for a lifetime.

The Northeast Residential Area is the oldest residential area on campus and is comprised of nine dormitories. The halls have been described as "quiet". One of the major advantages to living in Northeast is its close proximity to the main part of campus as well as to Worcester Dining Commons and Totman Physical Education Building. In the residential area there are study lounges, recreation spaces, two computer terminals, the Northeast Women's Center, and the Northeast Education Programming Committee.

"The Quad" is the center of social activity for Northeast. Almost any type of outdoor activity can be found there. Football, softball, frisbee as well as sunbathing and studying are popular on sunny days. For any student attending the New Student Program, the Quad brings back many fond memories.

SOUTHWEST

The Crowd, and Buzz, and Murmuring, Of this great Hive, the City.

City life is often exciting and fascinating, and Southwest offers this alternative to over 5,500 students. With a residential college, Center of Racial Studies, Malcolm X Center, three dining commons, Munchies, Hampden Art Gallery, Theater, and Snack Bar, radio station, and 16 dorms, Southwest is one of the most active campus living areas.

Southwest Area Government sponsored a battle of the bands, Holiday Fest, Block Dance, movies, blood drives, bands in the Blue Wall, and Southwest Week. SWAG was also instrumental in replacing furniture taken out by Housing Services for a proposed five-year "capital improvement plan".

Each living area is unique in its design, and Southwest is no exception. There are five towers and 11 lowrises. A "horseshoe", surrounded by dorms and dining commons, is the site for football games, snowball fights, and sunbathers. Leading to it all is the tunnel underneath Massachusetts Ave., connecting Southwest to the rest of the campus.

DINING COMMONS

The Dining Commons, or the D.C.'s as they are commonly known, are part of everyone's college experience. Who can forget those chicken cutlets and that savory beef strudel? With the meal plan mandatory for freshmen and sophomores, over half of the campus visits the D.C.'s daily in search of nourishment. Each meal provides a wide variety of choices that should please almost any taste as well as the discriminating eye.

Breakfast offers omelets or french toast, pancakes and waffles. Bagels, toast and several varieties of cereal are always offered for those who wish to eat light. At lunch time the selection grows even larger. Two main meals that can range from hamburgers to roast chicken to fried scallops are offered. If those are not to the students liking they can choose a hot dog, the soup du jour, a sandwich or they can help themselves to the salad bar which provides a variety of green, red, and orange vegetables. Dinner at the D.C.'s is usually the heartiest meal. Students can choose from three main dishes which range from steak to shepard's pie to canetelli supreme. Bread, rolls, fruit and desserts are available at the salad bar.

For those with special dietary preferences the Basics line is available at each meal. Basics consists of a selection of foods that does not include red meat. These meals range from salads to pizzas to an enormous variety of tofu dishes. The D.C. regularly prepares tofu meatballs, tofu ala king, tofu burgers and tofu surprise. For any students who wishes to eat Kosher, he or she may do so at Hampden Dining Commons.

Hampden, Berkshire and Hampshire Dining Commons are located in Southwest where the largest percentage of the student population lives. Franklin and Worcester Dining Commons are centrally located near Central and Northeast respectively.

Some D.C.s offer a variety of settings in which to eat. There is the "Barracks," in Worcester D.C., which makes up the bulk of the dining space. Tables are fairly close together and the atmosphere is usually noisy and hurried. For those who have time between classes and wish to dine at a more leisurely pace there are small sections such as the Oak Room. These have a quieter and more comfortable atmosphere.

Students may eat in any area regardless of where they live on or off campus. The only inhibiting factor depends upon the student's meal plan. The 19-meal plan is based on 3 meals a day and brunch and dinner on weekends. The 14-meal plan is based on two meals a day but can be used for any meal combination. The 10-meal plan, however, cannot be used on weekends and therefore limits the student to eating in the D.C. only during the school week.

student to eating in the D.C. only during the school week.

For students who are on the meal plan, the weekly menu may begin to lose its appeal. To break up the monotony, the D.C. provides theme and specialty nights. During theme nights and holidays the D.C.'s are decorated to fit the occasion. For example, during Halloween, pumpkins and monsters adorn the walls. Candy bars are distributed and a student may try his or her luck at bobbing for apples. Specialty nights offer variations in the menu. The most popular night is steak night. This offers the choice of a sirloin steak or another entree. Other specialties include a bread buffet, where several different breads are served, and sundae night, where students can create their own ice cream delights.

The Dining Commons are run by the University Food Services. Its main purpose is to provide interesting, diverse and well-balanced meals for the student population.

CENTRAL

Life is a mirror and will reflect back to the thinker what one thinks into it.

Central Residential Area is composed of 10 dormitories. Five of these are located at the top of "the hill." This hill strikes terror in the hearts of those who must climb it everyday. Even worse than the daily climb is the descent when there is snow and ice on the ground and the path has not quite been cleared enough. Of course, there are those ambitious people who "borrow" D.C. trays and slide down Baker Hill as an alternative to slipping down. The hill also provides such accommodations as plenty of room for any outdoor activity. Especially in the fall and in the spring, people can be seen studying, sunbathing, throwing frisbees, and a variety of other activities.

The Central Area Government helps sponsor such area activities as Fall Fest and Spring Concerts. Who can forget late night runs to Greenough Snack Bar when the munchies got to be too much to tolerate? Even if you wanted a nutritious meal, the Franklin Dining Commons is situated at the bottom of the hill, convenient to all Central Area residents. The Munchies store is found in Franklin and provides edible items not found either in the D.C. or at Greenough's. Central offers a great place to live, close to campus, with a lot of good friends to share time with.

ORCHARD HILL

Orchard Hill is an accurately-named residential area. A beautiful orchard lies atop the hill and is adjacent to the four, seven-story Orchard Hill dormitories. An observatory is located in the orchard but one does not need to use the equipment to appreciate the view. Much of the campus as well as the distant mountains form a panoramic display.

One of the many programs offered in Orchard Hill is the residential college. The availability of classes in the dorms is a great advantage to living at the top of a hill. Faculty members live in each dorm as permanent residents. This provides for a closer relationship between the faculty and the students. Other features of the hill include a snack bar, the Hilltop Health Club, and the Third World Center. All of these make Orchard Hill a better place to live.

The "Bowl", located in the midst of the four dormitories, is the scene of many events. Bowl Day is held there annually and this year a 20th anniversary was celebrated. The Bowl is also a great place for football, softball, and frisbee games. At times, the Bowl comes to life with mud sliding, "Bowl Wars," and dancing. Perhaps of all the memories Orchard Hill residents will carry with them, sliding down the hill in snowy weather, climbing up the hill in hot weather and good times in the Bowl will be among the most prominent.

Here comes the sun.

AFTER HOURS

What are you doing tonight?

On Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, this question rings out all over campus. It is not merely a question, but a dilemma that strikes terror in the hearts of indecision makers. With so many different night spots in the area, deciding where to go can be more difficult than choosing what to wear.

Location often determines what bar or bars one will spend an evening at. For those who live on campus, the closest choices are the Blue Wall, the Top of the Campus (TOC) and the Hatch. All are situated in the Student Union/Campus Center complex. Comedy Night on Tuesdays, movies, bands and some of the lowest drink prices in the area are mainstays at the Blue Wall (which can pull in up to $4,500 in three hours during happy hour), while the TOC offers student musicians, a great view of campus and one of the better places to watch Dynasty with friends on Wednesday nights. Local bands play at the back of the Hatch.

Within walking distance of campus, or five minutes by bus, are the downtown Amherst bars. Crowds predominate at the Spoke, Charlie's, the Pub, Delano's, Judie's, Barselotti's, the Time Out and the Drake. Each establishment has its own decor and atmosphere where one can meet old and new friends, classmates and romantic prospects.

The Village Inn, better known to students as the "Drake", housed three bars: the Drake (upstairs), Brad's Grapevine (a wine bar) and Willy's Rathskeller (downstairs). The Drake had more foreign beer on tap or bottled than any other bar in town and featured the UMass Blues Band on Wednesday nights. However, it closed for business at the end of May and will be converted into an apartment building.

If transportation is not a problem, then options also include Changes, Justin Ryan's, Carbur's, Pearl Street, the Red Balloon, Mike's West-view Cafe, the Seven O's and the Rusty Nail. Unlike Amherst center, parking at most of these bars is usually available, even though they may be crowded.

Underage students, who want to spend an evening out at a place other than the Hampshire Mall, can go to the Rusty Nail in Sunderland. The age requirement is 18 and the Nail serves non-alcoholic beverages. One of the few bars with live bands and room to dance, the Nail showcases a range of talent from relatively unknown groups, like High Tide, to those with a larger following, like the Stompers and Bo Diddley. (Editor's note: The Rusty Nail was destroyed in a fire in the summer of 1985.)

With 30,000 students in the Amherst area and over one quarter of them of drinking age, many friendships have been made at a bar over a beer or two. That's something to keep in mind the next time someone asks, "What are you doing tonight?"

FRATERNITIES

The ultimate measure of a man is not where he stands in moments of comfort and convenience, but where he stands at times of challenge and controversy.

Active, exciting, and highly spirited, the Greek living area goes a long way in helping to make the University of Massachusetts the great public university that it is. The fraternity/sorority system brings students from widely divergent backgrounds together to share in intellectual achievement, community affairs, social responsibility, and comradeship.

In the thirties and forties, eighty percent of the University campus was involved in the Greek housing system. Recognizing that tradition, and the thrust for excellence at the University, the Greek chapters are leading the way towards a rekindling of school spirit. The various chapters come under the common banner of the interfraternity council and the panhellenic council — the Greek Council. The council helps to bring the chapters together to solve problems, regulate, adjudicate, organize events such as fall homecoming and spring Greekfest, print a Greek area newsletter, arrange special Greek get-togethers and work on many community projects.

Many Greeks have received special honors this year. The National Interfraternity Conference presented some with a special award for seventy-five years of membership and the New England Interfraternity Conference gave others the 1985 Lunsford award for excellence. They were also recognized by the New England Conference for their outstanding rush programs.

At fraternities, University men can share interests, aspirations and even have a little fun and unwind from the pressures of school.

There are thirteen fraternities in and around campus. Each chapter is self-governed and self-maintained. They are places to study, places to get a ball game together, places to organize a charity drive, places to relax after going to classes all day long.

A fraternity is a home in the middle of a big university. It is also a connection to the past and to the future. By keeping in touch with alumni, members can assure the continuum that is the fraternity.

SORORITIES

A mind not to be changed by place or time, the mind is its own place, and in itself can make a Heaven of Hell, a Hell of Heaven.

Laughter and good times are things that anyone who joins a sorority is never without. A woman begins learning about sorority life and the individual houses at the university during rush.

In the fall, formal rush occurs. Women are given house tours of all nine sororities and decide on six that they are interested in. By going to theme parties and dinners, those who are rushing learn about the house and the sisters learn about them. The choices are then narrowed to three houses. Through a process set up by the Greek system, the women choose and are chosen by one house.

Informal rush differs in two ways: no one is required to visit all of the houses and no process of cutting choices occurs. Although this may seem easier, a woman going through informal rush may not learn about all nine sororities and therefore may not select the house that best fits her individual needs or that she can give the most to.

Social events are part of sorority life, with the Greek system offering formals, weekly exchanges with fraternities, homecoming and Greekfest. However, all of the sororities are also involved in various humanitarian activities, ranging from local philanthropies and community service to national organizations, such as Project HOPE and Easter Seals.

The sorority system at the university is the largest of its kind in New England. For some, it offers an alternative to living in a dorm and gives women an opportunity to grow in a supportive environment.

PARKING

In today's world, an automobile is considered to be an essential item, one that most people just cannot do without. Since almost everyone feels that way, an overabundance of cars has created a shortage of parking spaces with approximately 12,000 students living on campus and another 10,000 students commuting. Currently there are twenty-seven parking lots and one parking garage on campus. Those designated areas create approximately 9,700 parking spaces, 900 of which are in the parking garage.

From 7 a.m. to 3 p.m., there are two different types of parked cars - those with permits and those without. People without parking permits may park in spaces with meters or on certain levels in the parking garage. If a student obtains a parking permit for his car, then parking would depend upon what type of permit it is. A variety of eight different permits are used on this campus. A regular permit allows the vehicle to park only in its assigned lot during weekdays. A carpool permit is similar to the regular one, with the exception that it can be transferred to any vehicle within the carpool. For individuals with mobility difficulties a handicap permit may be purchased. People purchasing motorcycle permits are not assigned specific lot but they must park their motorcycles in the areas specified for motorcycle riders. For a person who only wishes to park later in the day, a night permit allows a vehicle to be parked on campus between the hours of 3 p.m. to 8 a.m. A mobile permit is very expensive but it allows the vehicle to park in any of the parking lots except for specially assigned spaces. People living in the University Apartments, Lincoln, North Village or who is a head of residence in one of the University residence halls can purchase a resident parking permit. Finally, a limited permit can be issued for part-time parking needs.

All of the permits mentioned can be purchased in the form of decals which are to be placed on the specific vehicle to which they apply. If a person sells or trades the vehicle, the decal must be removed and proof of the destroyed decal shown to the Parking Office to insure a new decal.

The various types of permits have a variety of costs depending on location and proximity to the UMass buildings. The lowest costing permit is $8.00 for a space in P-lot and increases to the price of $153.00 for a mobile parking permit. Since these costs are for the entire year the cost may be lower for a permit used only a portion of the semester. The money received from the permits is allocated overall into a system budget. Most of the budget goes for administrative costs, a transit subsidy and debt service payments. No money whatsoever is taken from students' semester bills for parking purposes.

Parking becomes a greater problem during the winter months due to snow removal regulations. Certain lots on campus will not allow any parking after 6 p.m. because of the problem with snow plowing, if it becomes necessary. The Parking Office also advises other means of transportation on snow days. With the absence of cars more plowing is completed during daylight hours. To help pay the Physical Plant workers for their help a contribution from the system budget is made to the Physical Plant which is responsible for all upkeep and maintenance.

Although there are almost 10,000 spaces on campus, lists for students wanting to get permits for particular lots still exist. Certain lots are in demand much more than others and lists may be several hundred names long. This means a student could wait three or four semesters before getting a space in a desired lot. If students do not want to wait they run the risk of getting caught and maybe even having the car towed.

There are ten parking guards from the Department of Public Safety that work specifically with parking. Their duties are to enforce the provisions of the rules and regulations for motor vehicles. Many of those regulations include proper parking procedures. Nine parking offenses constitute a $10.00 fine and sixteen parking offenses bring a lesser fine of $5.00. That may not seem like much money, but after several tickets the penalties begin to add up. If five parking tickets go unpaid the vehicle can be towed and kept until these fees are paid. The number of parking offenses has totalled over 100,000 in just the past two years and approximately $510,000 has been collected. All collections are placed into a student scholarship fund. If any student thinks he has been unfairly treated by receiving a ticket they may appeal their case. An appeal must be written to the Department of Public Safety within seven days of receiving the parking violation. A time and day is set and then the student appears before the Appeals Board. Approximately 2,155 cases were settled by that board last semester. The Appeals Board consists of six members: two undergraduate students, a graduate student, a member of the classified staff, a member of the faculty and a member of the administrative staff. A separate appeals process must be taken for parking tickets only. A written request must be submitted to the Parking Ticket Hearing Office within twenty-one calendar days from the receiving of the parking ticket. A hearing will then be granted before the Hearing Officer. Final decisions will be made by that person.

Overall, the parking situation on campus is not too bad, but some improvements should be made. More lots and better conditions in those already existing would help to rectify many of the problems that students face when they try to park their cars. Until changes are made, one must continue to drive around campus for hours searching for that elusive parking space.

When one thinks of off-campus housing, what first comes to mind is never having to eat in the dining commons again and making full use of the PVT A bus system. But, moving into an apartment or house is also one of the beginning steps to becoming part of the non-university world.

It does not take long to realize how easily rent, telephone and heating bills can deplete a paycheck or any savings a student may have. Food shopping and cooking can be a burden, and as macaroni & cheese and peanut butter & jelly sandwiches lose their appeal, sending out for pizza or subs becomes a nightly occurrence. The PVT A buses also must be contended with, unless one has a car and the money to run it. As almost any student living off-campus can attest to, there is nothing quite like a 100-yard dash to make the bus at 8:30 in the morning.

Adjusting to life in an apartment or house may be hard at first, but does have many advantages. Without resident assistants or campus security, one has more freedom. Food tastes better when not made at a dining commons (depending on one's culinary skills) and the bathroom is usually cleaner. As long as roommates agree, a student can have parties with as many friends as the place will hold. However, unlike a dorm, there will be no janitor to clean up the next morning.

FASHION

Diversity is one of the key assets of life on the UMass campus. Perhaps one of the best places to see such diversity is in the numerous styles of clothing worn around campus. Unfortunately people are often stereotyped by their clothes preference. The following fashion descriptions are some of the more popular stereotyped fashions. These are A Day In The Life Of

The Preppies

Bright and early each morning the Preppies rise and shower before the rest the campus awakes. Both the men and women put on their favorite Izod shirt, the one with the cute little alligator on the left breast, their neatly pressed button-down shirts and then drape a sweater over their backs and carefully knot the sleeves in front. Male Preppies put on khaki chinos, with creases so sharply pressed they could cut, and female Preppies put on khaki skirts, without a single wrinkle. No Preppie would be properly attired without their faithful top-siders worn, of course, minus socks. Men are always seen with short, neat, side parted hair and women always pull their hair back with a ribbon. Once dressed they grab their L. L. Bean back pack, with completed homework, and head for a Republican Club meeting.

The Punkers

Punkers are perhaps the most misunderstood group of students on campus. Whether this is because they keep to themselves or because people are afraid to get near them no one really knows. Each morning upon awakening the Punker decides what to wear that day. This is essential so while in the bathroom they know what color to dye their hair while they somehow spike it. Punkers frequently are seen in skin tight jeans, black leather jackets and spiked heels or boots. An integral part of every Punker's wardrobe are the chains, mass quantities of earrings and the ever apparent safety pins. Last but not least, before leaving their dorm room, the Punker applies the outrageous makeup and heads for the Campus Center.

The Naturalists

The Naturalists are a group of people who though quiet are seen everywhere. Each morning the Naturalist gets up and takes little time preparing for the day. Clothing decisions are usually limited to which long skirt and puffy blouse for women and a pair of faded, holey jeans and tie-dyed shirt for men. Leather thongs adorn their feet. The Naturalists' long hair, men's and women's, is either left in a cascade down the back or loosely woven in a long thick braid. Grabbing their guitar case (they all seem to be musically inclined), they head off to begin their day at the People's Market or the Earth Foods Cafe.

Kathleen Lacey and Margaret Shaw dress in the typical garb of naturalists.

Pam Pierson and Karyne Bofarjian are fashion followers.

The Fashion Followers

The Fashion Followers arise early each morning so as to have plenty of time to dress impeccably. Their shower products consist of the latest Vidal Sassoon line. Once back from the shower they decide which outfit is appropriate to clothe their bodies in. Every outfit in their closet is directly out of the pages of Vogue, Bazaar or GQ. Most of the women are careful not to break one of their perfectly manicured nails while applying their make-up flawlessly. No Fashion Follower would be so disgraced as to have a hair out of place or even look slightly wind blown. They leave their rooms in plenty of time to get to class without being late.

The Jocks

The Jocks roll out of bed fifteen minutes before class, after hitting three to five snooze alarms. After a quick shower they grab their daily costume of team jersey or sweatshirt and a pair of sweat pants. The Jocks never seem to tie their brand-name sneakers, usually high top. Whether this is because they don't have time or because they don't know how to tie them is yet unknown. Running their fingers through their hair gives it its finished, tousled look. Throwing everything in a duffel bag the Jock shuffles off, late for class. The Jock always seems to be heading in the direction of Boyden or N.O.P.E.

Reagan meets with Gromyko in D.C.

East met West when Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and President Ronald Reagan held a three and one-half hour meeting at the White House.

It was hoped that the meeting would ease strained relations between the Soviet Union and the United States. However, little appeared to be accomplished with the exception of a 20-minute photography session.

Discussion of the arms race was the focal point of the meeting. Both disagreed with each other's proposals to limit nuclear arms and criticized present programs.

This marked Reagan's first meeting with any Soviet official. Some close to the president believed that it cleared the way for future talks.

Calif. McDonald's donates site

After several meetings with community groups, the McDonalds Corp. agreed to donate the property of a site of a massacre to the city of San Diego.

The McDonalds restaurant, in the San Diego community of San Ysidro, was the location of a massacre on July 18, 1984. James Oliver Hubbery opened fire in the restaurant and killed 21 people; 19 others were wounded.

A park commemorating the victims of the shooting is planned for the site.

Alumni Stadium, NOPE renamed

The North Physical Education Building (NOPE) and Alumni Stadium were renamed for two former members of the UMass Physical Education Department.

Alumni Stadium is now named Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium. McGuirk was the first dean of the school of physical education and a long-time athletic director.

NOPE is called Ruth Totman Physical Education Building. Totman was the head of the Women's Physical Education Department for 21 years.

AHORA honored

In a ceremony at the Statehouse in Boston, Gov. Michael Dukakis signed a proclamation declaring Oct. 5 as AHORA Day at UMass.

AHORA, the Latin American Student Association, celebrated its twelfth year on campus. It functions to keep Latin American culture alive at the University through the Bilingual Collegiate Program, recruitment of Latin American students, and organizing cultural and educational events to raise community awareness.

Furniture taken from Southwest residential area

A proposed five-year capital improvement plan resulted in the removal of mirrors, lamps, and other furniture from dormitories in the Southwest residential area.

According to John Findlay, assistant director for maintenance operations, the items were removed to balance the type and amount of furniture in all dormitories.

"There are a lot more pieces of property in service in Southwest than anywhere on campus. We hope to be consistent; everyone should get the same amount of furniture," Findlay said.

Limited storage space and the large of number of property in Southwest necessitated removal of the items from only one residential area at a time.

Senate votes to fund 1985 Index

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted unanimously to approve a combination grant/loan to the Index, the University of Massachusetts yearbook.

The issue had been before the senate since last spring, when only $16,000 was allocated to the yearbook from the 1984-85 Student Government Association (SGA) budget.

Cindy Orlowski, Index editor in chief, said she was "excited" by the vote because it allowed the yearbook staff to begin production on the 1985 book.

The additional $10,000 grant and $10,000 loan came from the SGA's emergency deficit liquidation account.

The father of soul singer Marvin Gaye pleaded no contest to voluntary manslaughter in the shooting death of his son during an April 1 argument.

Gaye, who was shot twice in the chest on the eve of his 45th birthday, was known for such hits as "Sexual Healing" and "I Heard It Through the Grapevine." He had been celebrating with his parents when an argument flared.

Defense attorney Michael Schiff said that the charge was reduced from first-degree murder on a plea bargain, and added that he believes he will be able to persuade the judge not to send Gaye's father to prison.

Senate votes to raise drinking age

In a 34-1 decision, the Massachusetts Senate voted in favor of a proposal to raise the state's legal drinking age to 21, effective June 1, 1985.

The law could take effect sooner if other states in the New England region create a similar standard of 21 years.

The lone opposition to the law came from Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst. Olver is a chemistry professor on leave from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

"This law is unenforceable and will always be unenforceable," he said. There is no statistical evidence to support the idea that people at the age of 20 drink more and get into more accidents than 21 or 22."

The Senate appeared to have been persuaded to raise the drinking age by the threat of losing federal highway funds due to a law passed by Congress.

The law says that states with drinking ages under 21 would be penalized 5 percent in fiscal year 1987 and 10 percent the following year.

200,000 attend Ferraro rally

In one of the largest single gatherings in University of Massachusetts history, an estimated 20,000 people heard Geraldine A. Ferraro speak at a Democratic rally by the Campus Center Pond.

Ferraro, the nation's first woman vice presidential candidate on a major party ticket told the crowd, "People have had enough of the arms race and the new cold war. It's time for arms control and a new commitment to peace."

The rally was covered by state-wide newspapers, the Boston Globe and the Boston Herald, and by television stations in Boston, Springfield and Hartford.

Her rally, according to Dean of Students, William F. Field, was one of the "three or four" most prominent political events to occur on campus in the history of the University.

After more than a year's absence, Doonesbury, the Pulitzer Prize-winning comic strip created by Gary Trudeau, is back.

When Doonesbury debuted in 1970, it appeared in 28 newspapers. In January 1983, when Trudeau announced he would temporarily cease the comic strip, it was carried in 726 newspapers to an estimated readership of 60 million.

Trudeau said, "It's time to give my characters some $20 haircuts, graduate them and move them out into the larger world of grown-up concerns."

Readers will now discover just how well Trudeau used his time off to move his characters into the mid-80s.

Ghandi killed by security guards

Indira Ghandi's 16-year reign as India's prime minister ended on Oct. 30, when she was assassinated by two Sikh security guards.

Ghandi received numerous bullet wounds. Others guarding the prime minister immediately killed the Sikh assassins. Despite lifesaving efforts by doctors, Ghandi died at the All-India Institute of Medical Sciences hospital.

Following her death, confusion and anger at the Sikhs resulted in the deaths of 1,000 people. It is believed that the assassination was in retaliation for troops sent into Punjab to control the Sikhs.

In a speech given the night before her death, Ghandi said, "I am not interested in a long life. I am not afraid of these things. I don't mind if my life goes in the service of this nation. If I die today, every drop of my blood will invigorate the nation."

Rajiv Ghandi, the prime minister's son, assumed control of the state.

Clinics bombed

In a presidential election year marked by an emotional debate on abortion, abortion clinics around the country have been bombed and set afire in increasing numbers.

At least 19 attacks have been reported as of mid-October by the National Abortion Federation compared to only four reported in 1983 and three in 1982.

Anti-abortionists are being blamed for the attacks but have denied any association with the attacks. Police are investigating the possibility of a connection among the attacks, but there appeared to be no national conspiracy.

Tigers win, 8-4

In their first World Series since 1968, the Detroit Tigers defeated the San Diego Padres in a sweeping 8-4 victory.

Kirk Gibson, the game's high scorer, cleaned up with 5 runs and 2 home-runs. Padre's relief pitcher Goose Gossage, who has not permitted a run in 7 previous World Series games, allowed Gibson his second homer during the 8th inning and Lance Parrish one in the 7th.

The Tigers capped the American League championships with 839 runs and 187 homers during the season.

"Baby Fae" receives baboon heart

The transplanting of a baboon heart into a human infant made medical history in October.

Baby Fae, suffering from hypoplastic left heart syndrome, received the animal heart as a last-ditch effort by doctors to save her life.

Doctors were pleased with her progress. However, complications developed and she died almost 20 days after the operation. Kidney problems and a heart block precipitated her death.

Public outcry followed from humanitarian and animal rights groups who claimed that the surgery was unethical and cruel.

Reagan elected president over Mondale; Kerry succeeds Tsongas for Senate seat

Ronald Reagan will begin his second term in January after winning the presidential election over Walter Mondale on Nov. 6.

Reagan and Vice President George Bush won 48 states, with Mondale and running mate Geraldine Ferraro taking only the District of Columbia and Mondale's home state of Minnesota.

However, Ferraro said that Mondale won the "battle for equal opportunity . . . he opened a door that will never be closed again," when he named her as the first woman to run as vice president on a national ticket.

In Massachusetts, John Kerry (D) succeeded an ailing Paul Tsongas (D) for the U.S. Senate seat, defeating Republican businessman Ray Shamie.

"I believe that this race gave Massachusetts a real choice about the future. And the results speak loudly about which direction this great commonwealth of ours wants to move in," Kerry said.

Amherst residents voted in favor of Mondale by almost a three-to-one margin. They also supported the town health department's decision to fluoridate Amherst's drinking water.

U.S. college grads lack humanities

William J. Bennet, chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities, charged that many American college graduates lack "even the most rudimentary knowledge" of history, art, literature and philosophy due to faculty and administrators who have lost faith in the humanities.

Statistics show that the number of majors in English has dropped by 57% since 1970; in history by 62%; and in modern languages by 50%.

A third of all colleges required some foreign language study for admission in 1960, but only 14% in 1966.

Students can graduate from 75% of U.S. colleges and universities without studying American literature or history; and from 86% without studying ancient Greek or Roman civilization.

Bennet said, "The decline in learning in the humanities was caused in part by a failure of nerve and faith on the part of many college faculties and administrators."

Sexual harassment a concern at UMass

According to Grant Ingle, process consultant at the Office of Human Relations, the high incidence of sexual harassment at UMass has become a serious concern.

University policy states that sexual harassment includes unwelcomed sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature.

A UMass survey of 337 graduate and undergraduate women found that 25% of women surveyed said they personally had experienced sexual harassment at UMass. Half of the women said they had experienced negative remarks about females, the stereotyping of women in sexually derogatory ways, and sexual remarks about their appearance or sexual activity by course instructors or other staff members.

Faculty vote to end pass/fail courses

On November 29, the Faculty Senate passed an amendment to the general education proposal prohibiting students from taking required courses pass/fail.

The amendment added to the proposal that would replace the present C, D, and E core requirement with courses in areas designated as "social world", "biological world", and "analytical reasoning" was designed to "tighten up" the present core requirements and supply students with "breadth of knowledge". It will effect all incoming students in the fall of 1986 and thereafter.

Famine kills over 600,000, threatens millions in Africa

Over 600,000 people were killed and 13.5 million threatened by the worst famine in African history, one that has left 30 countries officially listed as hungry and could have been avoided if warnings had been heeded two years ago.

Drought, population growth, civil war, and mismanagement of the countries' economies were the main factors that led to Africa's second famine in ten years.

Ethiopia received much publicity when the disaster was first brought to the public's attention last month by a British film crew. Aid poured in, but the amount was too great for the country to handle.

Problems arose with the transportation and distribution of food and clothing. Millions of refugees migrated to remote camps, which sometimes were in other countries. A shortage of fuel and vehicles, deluged airports, and impassable roads made it difficult for relief workers to reach the camps.

When food did arrive, there often was not enough to go around. Doctors committed triage, giving food and other supplies to those with the highest chances for survival.

The Ethiopian government was blamed for ignoring its starving people, spending $200 million instead on a party to celebrate the tenth anniversary of its revolution. It was only after the celebration that journalists were permitted to view devastated areas.

It was expected that more than one million people in Ethiopia alone would die from starvation, malnutrition, tuberculosis, typhus, and other diseases before the famine ends.

Poison gas leak kills 2,500 in Bhopal

More than 2500 people died from a poison gas leak at a pesticide plant in Bhopal, India, and many others faced blindness and sterility.

On Dec. 3 at 12:56 a.m., methyl isocyanate escaped from an underground storage tank at the Union Carbide pesticide plant. The leak lasted less than one hour and killed hundreds of people as they slept.

The gas, which attacks the central nervous system and has no antidote or treatment, causes victims to drown from a buildup of fluid in their lungs.

By the end of the week, nearly 150,000 were treated at clinics and hospitals in Bhopal and surrounding communities, arriving at a rate of one per minute.

Another health hazard resulted from carcasses of dogs and cattle left to decay in the streets. The army eventually removed the animals with cranes.

Several plant officials were arrested on negligence charges, but later released. In addition to contributing $1 million to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's $4 million relief fund, the corporation agreed to set up an orphanage and sent doctors, medical supplies, and chemical experts to Bhopal.

The cause of the accident was cited as a buildup of pressure in the storage tank which was not detected by safety devices until after the leak had begun.

Draft dodgers to be refused aid

Male college students who failed to register for the draft will be refused state scholarships due to a Massachusetts law banning aid to "draft dodgers."

The law, which could affect an estimated $24 million in scholarships, is similar to the Solomon Amendment. That measure requires male students to register for the military draft before collecting federal aid.

College officials in the state maintain that there will be few problems in complying with the law. Estelle Shanley, spokeswoman for the State Board of Regents of Higher Education, said that it "will have no impact at all on us because we already have to adhere to federal regulations. This is just adding another step."

Tutu receives Nobel

Days before receiving the Nobel Peace Prize for his work against apartheid in South Africa, Bishop Desmond M. Tutu criticized President Reagan's South African policy, calling it "immoral, evil, and totally un-Christian."

Tutu spoke before the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Africa and was given a standing ovation during the hearing after he said that Reagan's policy of quiet diplomacy toward Africa "is giving democracy a bad name."

"You are either for us or against apartheid, and not by rhetoric," he said. "You are either on the side of the oppressed or on the side of the oppressor. You can't be neutral."

Later in the week, Tutu flew to Oslo to accept the peace prize, but a bomb threat delayed the ceremony by 90 minutes. Once at the podium, he stated that the threat "just shows how desperate our enemies have become" and that he believed his crusade for human rights would succeed.

Reagan takes cut

President Ronald Reagan and other Republican congressional leaders took a 10 percent cut in pay as a symbolic gesture to help $42 million worth of federal budget cuts pass through Congress.

The reduction was aimed at holding spending for the 1986 fiscal year to current levels.

Reagan's plan would reduce, freeze, or eliminate some government programs, many of which were politically popular.

Happy hours banned

The country's first ban of happy hours was signed in November by Gov. Michael Dukakis, ending drink specials in Massachusetts.

After Dec. 10, drink specials, free drinks, reduced-price drinks, drinking contests, drinks as prizes, and pitchers sold to one person were prohibited.

The law was intended to reduce drunk driving. As a result, bars across the state offered weekly specials and food to attract customers.

William Schroeder suffered a stroke 18 days after receiving an artificial heart.

Man has stroke after receiving artificial heart

William Schroeder, the second recipient of a mechanical heart, suffered a "small but severe stroke," according to doctors at the Humana Heart Institute International in Louisville, Ky.

The stroke impaired Schroeder's speech and left him with short-term memory loss and a weak right side. It occurred one day before President Reagan called him to check on his progress.

Schroeder, a 53-year-old former Ford assembly-line worker who had no more than 40 days to live before his operation in November, told Reagan that he was having trouble getting checks from Social Security. The next day, two government officials visited Schroeder and presented him with five month's back payment.

Prior to the stroke, doctors described Schroeder as making an excellent recovery. Days after the surgery, his first request was for a beer and he told nurses that, "Ronald Reagan should be so lucky as to have to go through this."

Gay and Lesbian Day aids awareness

Student gay rights advocates staged awareness activities, organized a counter march against an anti-homosexual rally, and presented University officials with demands to create an environment of civility on campus.

The People's Gay Alliance (PGA) and the Lesbian Union sponsored the "Gay and Lesbian Day". The day's events included a social hour and a dance. Supporters wore blue jeans and handed out purple balloons.

However, a "Hug A Homosexual" booth created controversy with a few students who planned to hang an effigy representing the gay rights movement in an effort to protest the booth and other activities. PGA President John Jablonski convinced the rally's organizers that their actions were "oppressive".

Over 100 people formed a counter rally and marched to Whitmore Administration Building. The group met with six protestors and listened to speakers discuss gay issues.

Later in the day, members of the PGA gave Chancellor Joseph Duffey and other administrators a list of demands for creating a campus environment "of civility for lesbian, bisexual, gay people and our heterosexual allies."

Among the demands were adding material about the experience of lesbians and gays to the libraries and curriculum and establishing an office for cultural and educational activities, which would be professionally-staffed.

BOG may be replaced by new board

The Board of Governors BOG, the students' voice in the operation of the Campus Center/Student Union complex, could be eliminated if a plan to combine several trust funds is approved by the Board of Trustees.

The plan to incorporate the trust funds of the Campus Center, Conference Services, and the University's dining commons also includes replacing the 32-member BOG with a 16-member Auxiliary Services Board.

Members of the BOG said that the proposal is Whitmore Administration's attempt to take over the Campus Center and limit student input.

"We're not against the trust fund consolidation, but this is just a convenient way for them to get rid of us," said BOG chairwoman Jane Donohue.

Student leaders met with administrators to work on alternative plans. Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey suspended final action on the original proposal until March.

Union ratifies contract at Yale

Clerical and technical workers at Yale University broke their strike and went back to work with what was called a landmark victory for the issue of comparable worth.

The union, Local 34, went on strike in September. Yale was charged with discrimination against women and minorities, paying them less than male workers holding comparable jobs.

The contract, ratified by the union, allows a salary increase of 35 percent over a three and a half year period. The actual increase will occur in 17 steps.

Tom Keenan, a union organizer and graduate student at Yale, said that public pressure and national attention the strike received were major factors in the ultimate settlement.

Selectman object to GWEN tower in nuclear-free zone

A proposed 300-foot radio tower, to be used for transmitting signals to other locations in the event of a nuclear attack, was the source of objection by the Amherst Board of Selectmen.

Major objections to the proposal were related to the security of the facility and the monetary implications of the plan.

Richard Minear, a selectman, was especially concerned that the tower, to be comparable in size to the tower library at UMass, would become a target of anti-nuclear protest. Minear also stressed the fact that police costs for safeguarding the structure could pose a budget problem.

Further questions were raised as to the appropriateness of such a system in Amherst due to a decision in 1982 which declared Amherst to be a nuclear-free zone.

The tower is part of a $122 million national communications system that will cover the northeastern part of the country. The Ground Wave Emergency Network (GWEN) is designed to aid in communications between defense posts after a nuclear attack.

“Power and Class” rained out in D.C.

Sub-zero temperatures cancelled the traditionally elaborate Inaugural Parade, but it did not prevent the “Power and Class” of New England from performing in Washington, D.C.

The University Marching Band were 225 of the invited guests at a Landover, Md. ceremony for President Ronald Reagan. The Band played in three out of five scheduled performances, including opening the Inaugural Pageant.

The band also had the opportunity to tape a segment for “Good Morning America”. However, inclement weather hindered the photography equipment and the band’s instruments.

This was the second time that the UMass Marching Band attended the Inaugural event. In 1981, the group marched in Reagan’s first inaugural parade and were featured on the steps of the Capital.

49ers win XIX

The San Francisco 49ers beat the Miami Dolphins, 38-16, at Super Bowl XIX in Palo Alto, Calif., in a game which delayed the public presidential Inauguration ceremonies by one day.

Various Super Bowl records were tied or broken during the game, including most touchdowns (by Joe Montana, 49ers quarterback) and the highest rate charged for a 30-second commercial ($500,000).

Miami committed many turnovers, thereby giving an advantage to the 49ers that ultimately ended in the defeat of the Dolphins.

Civil rights violated in Henry case

The civil rights of a resident assistant were violated by the University of Massachusetts last year when the student was charged with setting a fire in Crampton dormitory, according to a report by a faculty senate committee.

The report was presented by the faculty senate Committee on the Status of Minorities to the senate Rules Committee last May. It investigated the incident and made recommendations to prevent future rights infringements.

Yvette Henry, a chemistry major, was arrested in Dec. 1983 for allegedly setting a fire in another student's room. As a result, she was suspended from school, barred from classes and residence halls, fired from her RA position, and later allowed to attend classes in the presence of an escort.

The report found that Henry was "subjected to grueling interrogation for several hours after her arrest, without benefit of legal advice" and her room searched before her arrest, without her knowledge or a search warrant; her minority status "may have played a part in the conduct of the investigation and in the arrest"; the Dean of Students allowed questioning to continue after Henry's arrest, without the knowledge of whether her Miranda rights had been read; and despite efforts by minority administrators, the Dean of Students Office did not use a procedure designed to "facilitate the involvement of respected members of the minority community in any situation in which a minority student was in serious difficulty."

The faculty senate refused to publicly release the report. David Booth, chairman of the Rules Committee, said that it "was not clear if the report was written to be "published." However, the report was printed in the Collegian.

Henry currently has two $6.5 million lawsuits pending against the University and law enforcement officials.

Graduate students object to new fee

The proposal of a new fee, aimed at paying the debt service on many of the University's buildings, was met with opposition by the student body.

The Authority Fee (formerly the Universal Resource Fee) is a consolidation of five fees: dining commons, residence halls, athletics, transit, and Campus Center. It will amount to a yearly $261 charge to all students, undergraduate and graduate.

Graduate students rallied against the fee. About 300 marched from the Student Union to Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey's office in the Whitmore Administration Building, chanting, "No way, we won't pay."

"Graduate students are paid less for their teaching here than at any other school," said Sanjiv Dugal, president of the graduate senate. He said that by instituting the fee, the University was adding "insult to injury."

Before leaving Whitmore, about 250 students signed Duffey's "guest list."

Cancer to kill 22%

The American Cancer Society projected that one in three people born in 1985 will ultimately develop cancer because of higher life expectancies.

Cancer, generally considered to be an older person's disease, is expected to kill 22 percent of those born this year.

Lawrence Garfinkel, spokesman for the society, said that advances made in reducing the number of deaths from heart and blood vessel disease, the nation's top killer, allowed more people to live longer and get cancer instead.

Police guilty of murdering priest

Three Interior Ministry police officers were found guilty of murdering a pro-Solidarity priest in Poland, a country where secret police are usually beyond repudiation.

The three men received prison sentences of up to 25 years for instigating the incident. Twenty-five years is the maximum penalty under Polish law, except for death.

The Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko died after being beaten and was then thrown into a reservoir in October.

Public outcry was a factor which resulted in the unprecedented public trial of the four policemen.

Professor sues for denial of rights

A University of Massachusetts assistant professor sued the University for alleged suppression of his First Amendment rights which guarantee freedom of speech.

Roger W. Libby, an author, researcher, sexologist, member of the board of consultants for Forum magazine, and teacher in the UMass home economics department, claimed that he was denied tenure last year due to his views of sexuality.

Named in the suit are the Board of Trustees, President David C. Knapp, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, other administrators, and faculty members. The suit also calls for an injunction to prevent Libby's dismissal in May.

The Home Economics Department Personnel committee refused to grant tenure to Libby last year, making successive votes to back the initial vote. Libby said the recommendations from faculty members and students were ignored by his superiors.

"They're canning me because I'm outspoken," Libby told the Collegian. "I'm just trying to prove that there has been a whole history of discrimination against me. This has been going on for three years, at least. They tell me my achievements don't merit promotion, but . . . they restrict me in my academic pursuits because they don't like me."

Acid rain pollutes Massachusetts

According to a report released by Gov. Michael Dukakis and Rep. Edward Markey, acid rain has left many of the state's bodies of water polluted from sulfur dioxide emissions.

The first phase of the Acid Rain Monitoring Project revealed that of the 40 percent of the state's bodies of water tested, five percent were acidified and an additional 14 percent were listed as "critical." The state's soils proved to be unable to neutralize acid pollutants.

"It is time for us to stop the rain that damages our land," said Markey, D-Malden. "It is time for us to stop the damage caused by pollution raining down on our region."

Bennett asks for "divestiture"

William J. Bennett, secretary of education, was criticized by college students after commenting that they should give up stereos, cars and beach vacations in order to pay for college.

The remark referred to President Reagan's budget cuts which eliminated grants and loans for more than one million students.

Bennett said that students would have to go without luxuries, suggesting that it was similar to a "divestiture of certain sorts: stereo divestiture, three-weeks-at-the-beach divestiture."

The secretary also said that people should be more careful about spending $20,000 on a college education.

"More of us might start thinking about the $20,000 investment with the same sort of care we think about when we buy a car: kick the tires and drive around the block," said Bennett.

Educational administrators were against the budget cut, stating that it would hurt middle income families who might not be eligible for the available federal aid.

Gorbachev named as Soviet premier

Mikhail S. Gorbachev became the third Communist Party general secretary in over two years, selected for the position after the death of Soviet President Konstantin U. Chernenko.

The change in leadership took place on the eve of U.S. — Soviet nuclear arms control talks in Geneva. The discussion of space weaponry and missiles began as planned.

Gorbachev, 54, is the youngest man in the Politburo. He has degrees in agriculture and law and became a member of the executive committee in 1980. He was expected to continue Andropov's economic policies.

According to the Kremlin, Chernenko died from emphysema and other problems on March 10. The U.S. delegation, headed by Vice President George Bush, attended the funeral. President Ronald Reagan was not present, saying that he "didn't see anything that could be achieved" by going to Moscow.

The Tass news agency said that Chernenko was a "staunch fighter for the ideals of Communism and for peace."

Two CIA protestors receive support

A University of Massachusetts student and an Amherst resident were tried for disrupting CIA recruitment at UMass, while about 200 protesters picketed outside of Hampshire County District Court.

Perry Amsellem and Lisa Sheehy were sentenced to 15 hours of community service. They were arrested in November after refusing to leave the University Placement Service Office where CIA recruiters were conducting interviews.

Judge Alvertus J. Morse said he "firmly believes citizens have rights to petition their governments. The defendants had a right to be on campus to inform the public."

After the trial, Amsellem said that he believed the judge's decision was political.

"It would have created waves of civil disobedience," if the judge had not found them guilty because of the precedent it would have set.

Students elect Roth, Burgess

Stacy Roth and Dan Burgess were elected as co-presidents of the 1985 Student Government Association, receiving 58 percent of the vote.

Roth said that she and Burgess intended to work first on student rights issues and outreach plans. She also said saving the Campus Center Board of Governors would receive a high priority.

Over 3,500 students voted in the election, one of the highest turnouts in recent years.

The senate held its own election, naming John Ruddock as speaker and Dianne Rossi as treasurer.

Roddock stated that unity in the senate was one of his main goals.

Measles worries Fla. officials

A measles epidemic that began in Boston was the cause of worry for Florida health officials that the disease would be communicated to other students during spring break.

Hank Janowski, spokesman for the Florida Department of Health and Rehabilitation, said that chances were high for the disease to spread.

"With all those students packed into planes and buses, the opportunity for measles transmission is excellent," said Janowski.

When spring break began, fliers were given to students and the danger of measles received coverage by the media.

Janowski said that he would like to see students bring proof of vaccination when they come to Florida for break.

Fire destroys Amherst College gym

A $1 million Amherst College gymnasium was destroyed by an early morning fire, the result of an electrical malfunction.

A campus security officer reported the blaze after seeing flames through the top of the building. Chief of Police Don Maia said it was "one of the biggest fires" in Amherst.

A sprinkler system and direct alarm to the fire department were not installed when the gym was built nine years ago.

The fire was extinguished after two hours, but firefighters hosed down the remnants of the gym for over 10 hours.

"It is, of course, a major disaster for our college, but we know it could have been worse," said Peter Pouncey, Amherst College president. "We will try to replace it at the earliest opportunity."

New trial begins against vigilante

The court case of a "subway vigilante" was reopened by the New York Supreme Court in light of new evidence presented by the district attorney in Manhattan.

Bernhard Goetz, a 34-year-old engineer, was found not guilty during the original trial of attempted homicide of four teenagers. The grand jury indicted him only for illegal weapons possession.

Last December, Goetz shot the teenagers, who allegedly bother him for money. One of the youths was hospitalized with brain damage and all four had criminal records.

The prosecution, headed by Manhattan District Attorney Robert Morgenthau, revealed that they had an additional witness to testify against Goetz.

SAFA visits D.C.

A group of 53 students, representing Students Advocating Financial Aid (SAFA) from the University of Massachusetts, travelled to Washington, D.C. to speak out against President Reagan's proposed budget cut of financial aid for college students.

The group met with U.S. House Speaker Thomas O'Neill, Sen. Edward Kennedy, Rep. Silvio Conte, and more than 40 legislative aids.

During a meeting with Conte, R-Pittsfield, he said, "You picked a good time to be in Washington. You can feel the tension in the air."

O'Neill told the students on the floor of the House of Representatives that "the more people that speak out, the softer the blows will be." SAFA President Cynthia Howland and member James Shaw later presented him with the signatures of 5,800 UMass students who were against the cut in aid.

Four-day sit-in results in compromises

A rally to demonstrate against the proposed Universal Resource Fee and plans for dissolving the Campus Center Board of Governors ended in a four day sit-in at the University's Whitmore Administration Building.

The occupation began after the "Rally for Student Rights." Of the 200 students who started the sit-in, 25 remained after the building closed for the day. The group devised a list of nine demands, including modification of the URF, retention of the BOG, divestment of UMass' stock in South Africa, institution of a student governing board over the Student Activities Office, and judicial immunity for those involved with the protest.

"We will stand together until all of our demands are met or at least negotiated openly and fairly," said Student Senate Speaker John Ruddock.

However the protestors lost one demand when the Board of Trustees approved the $261 resource fee.

Dan Burgess, SGA co-president, said, "It shows a lack of concern for student input (and) demonstrated a lack of communication between the administration and students."

The sit-in ended after student leaders and the administration reached a compromise. The administration agreed to maintain the BOG, establish a commission to present information about divestment to the Board of Trustees with the "April 1st Coalition," help appeal to the Board of Regents of Higher Education to prevent a possible tuition increase, pay for the cost of additional security during the sit-in, and not press charges or take disciplinary action against the protestors.

A candlelight vigil was held at Smith College in support of a student who was raped. Students organized the vigil, which was attended by about 150 women, to protest the rape and the insufficient security on campus. One organizer said that the school often does "not give full details" in an attempt to avoid issues of sexual abuse.

Women hold vigil

Two thousand University of Massachusetts and area women participated in a rally, march, and candlelight vigil to protest violence against women.

"Take Back The Night" was last held at UMass in 1979. According to coordinators, the event was "a night of women's resistance against violence."

Jean Grossholtz spoke to the crowd in front of the Student Union about battered women's shelters. She said women created shelters for women to "empower them to take back their lives." A woman who was a battered wife and Chong Amy Yu, a coordinator at the Everywoman's Center, also spoke.

Following a martial arts demonstration, the group marched to Amherst Common carrying candles and banners. They listened to Julie Meyer, a UMass student, speak then held a two minute silence for women victims of violence.

Flint Laboratory gutted in blaze

A fire cause by insulation ignited from a blowtorch destroyed Fisher Laboratory, located near Orchard Hill.

One firefighter was injured during the two-alarm blaze, which began on the first floor. A physical plant welder was cutting through a pipe and inadvertently overheated insulation behind a wall.

"The fire was on the second floor by the time we arrived," said Capt. Tim Atteridge of the Amherst Fire Department. He said the amount of smoke caused difficulty for firefighters.

According to Art Clifford, director of the Office of Public Information, damages were estimated at $50,000.

House cuts all aid to Contra rebels

The House of Representatives voted to cut off all military aid to Contra insurgents trying to overthrow the government in Nicaragua, giving President Ronald Reagan a major foreign policy defeat.

The Democrat-controlled House rejected three proposals, although Reagan promised not to use the money until the end of the fiscal year on Sept. 30 and to reopen negotiations with the Sandinista government.

The decisions stopped the president's three-year battle to weaken the leftist government. The final vote on the issue was decided by a 303-123 margin.

Funding could still come through other sources, such as other countries, the CIA, and private contributions.

Thousands of people protested in Washington. According to Alex Guest of the UMass Peacemakers, six UMass students were arrested.

BOG bans Coors, votes for new shop

The Campus Center Board of Governors voted to ban the sale of Coors beer citing as their reasons employee discrimination and the political stance of the company's owners.

According to Jim Shaw, a member of the BOG and the Massachusetts AFL/CIO, the Adolph Coors Co. subjects workers to polygraph tests and search and seizures, is considered anti-union and prejudiced, and publicly and financially supports right-wing political organizations, such as the John Birch Society.

Last year, the AFL/CIO initiated a national boycott against the company, which has been joined by the U.S. Student Association, the National Education Association, and the National Organization for Women. Arthur R. Osborne, president of the Mass. AFL/CIO, said the boycott began because the Coors family has "taken the lead in anti-worker, anti-union issues in the U.S."

The Campus Center administration agreed to sell out the remaining inventory of the beer.

In other BOG action, the board decided to replace the former Union Records Unlimited space with a student-run ice cream shop.

The proposal, submitted by Ginger LaVoi and Bob Cohen, a BOG member, was approved after a second vote on the issue. A $4,300 loan from the Student Government Association and a $1,000 loan from the Graduate Student Senate were necessary to cover the costs of renovations and capital to open the shop.

Some members of the BOG had mixed feelings about the decision because the space is considered student-controlled. The Bicycle Co-op, a non-profit student service, vied for the space because their present space is too small, according to the RSO's president, Michelle Desaulnner.

"I'm very disappointed with their decision," said Desaulnners. "They were talking about money and profit and that's not the point we're trying to make. Our point is to serve the common student who doesn't have the money for an expensive service."

Police arrest 32

Police arrested 32 students, who protested for the University to divest in South Africa, in order to end a four-hour sit-in in the treasurer's office.

According to Gerald O'Neill, director of the UMass department of public safety, it was the second largest number of arrests on campus since a 1968 Vietnam protest.

The 20 men and 12 women were arrested after refusing to leave Robert Brand's office because he would not speak to the group. Brand was not in on that afternoon.

The protestors wanted the University to divest immediately.

"Our duty is to have them accelerate divestment," said Matthew Shakespeare. "Each day that investment continues is a black spot on the University."

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said charges of trespassing would be filed against the protestors and academic disciplinary procedures would follow.

"Disturbing an office is not something the University can put up with," Duffey said. "I don't intend to put up with it anymore."

Reagan criticized for Bitburg visit

Controversy surrounded President Ronald Reagan's visit to a cemetery in Bitburg, West Germany, where many of Hitler's SS troopers are buried.

Demonstrations occurred throughout the United States and Europe and Jewish leaders wrote to Reagan to urge him to cancel the visit.

Reagan said that it was "morally right" for him to visit the cemetery. He led a wreath-laying ceremony, but was jeered by protestors whenever he made an appearance.

Criticism also revolved around the president's remark that Germans killed during World War II were victims "just as surely as the victims in concentration camps."

Rapist released after victim recants

Gary Dotson, convicted of rape in 1979, was released from prison and his sentence was commuted by the governor of Illinois after a woman who claimed he raped her testified that she had contrived the rape.

Dotson served six years of a 25-to-50-year sentence. Gov. James R. Thompson freed Dotson, but refused to grant a pardon.

His former accuser, Catherine Webb, said she made up the rape because she thought she was pregnant. After joining a Baptist church, she decided to make amends. Webb said her confession "was difficult," but she "gained some peace from it."

Dotson said he would try to clear his name by going through a new trial or continuing to appeal.

Drake will become apartment building

May 31 marked the end of a tradition when the Village Inn, better known as "The Drake", closed down to be converted into an apartment building.

Owner Bradford Parker sold the bar and hotel because the use of Brad's Grapevine, a bar designed for an older crowd, was not approved by the Zoning Board.

Elaine Parker, the owner's wife, said that once the drinking age went up, they would not be able to stay in business without the additional bar.

On the last night the Drake was open, hundreds crammed into the bar. Police were called to disperse the crowd after it closed.

von Bulow retried

Claus von Bulow, whose 1982 conviction for trying to kill his wife was overturned by the Rhode Island Supreme Court, was retried for the attempted murder.

The prosecution contends that von Bulow twice tried to kill his wife, Sunny, with insulin injections so that he could collect her $14 million inheritance and marry his lover.

The state Supreme Court overturned the original conviction because the state did not give von Bulow's lawyers access to a private investigator's notes taken after Sunny's second coma and did not get a search warrant before examining some evidence from the black bag.

The grand jury surprised prosecutors by finding von Bulow not guilty of the charges.

Record 18,240 apply to UMass

A record number of applications for freshman admissions was received by the University, although the number of students applying for transfers to UMass was lower than expected.

Of 18,240 applications received, over 6,000 were rejected. Timm Rinehart, acting director of Undergraduate Admissions, said, "This is the most selective and competitive the University has been in the history of the institution."

"We want to be a University of Michigan, UNC (University of North Carolina) or a UVA (University of Virginia)," said Rinehart.

The director of Transfer Affairs, Kathy Ryan, expected that many of those who were rejected for admission this year will apply for transfers to UMass next year.

Gay rights march attended by 2,000

The fourth annual Lesbian and Gay Liberation March, held in Northampton, attracted 2,000 people who walked through the town singing, chanting and waving banners.

Supporters and protestors attended the march, which "gets bigger and bigger" each year, according to Kathryn Courtland Millis of Gay and Lesbian Activities (GALA).

This year's theme was "moving together, building unity and celebrating diversity," according to Millis. GALA sponsored the event which featured speakers and musicians.

Organizer Kim Christiansen said, "Our community has been under attack and attacks still occur. At least one member of our lesbian community has been murdered this year and this should never happen again."

"We are proud and angry and the rights we are not given we will take," said Christiansen.

YEAR IN REVIEW

Student activism: A revival of the protest movement

While the national media chose to make 1984-85 the "Year of the Conservative Student," the fact of the matter was that '84-'85 marked the revival of the student protest movement. Campuses across the country are ringing in the 80s with the sound of the 60s.

From sit-ins to teach-ins, from clamoring rallies to candlelight vigils, political songs, chants and speeches can once again be heard in the air as students are standing up in large numbers for what they believe to be right, just and fair.

Students joined the Yale workers' strike. They sat-in at Columbia to protest their alma mater's investments in South Africa; there were sit-ins at Tufts, Rutgers, and the University of Colorado at Boulder, also against apartheid. The students at Brown voted to have cyanide distributed on campus in the event of a nuclear war as a symbolic protest of the nuclear arms race. And UMass was no exception; in fact, the University student body was in the forefront.

The reemergence of activism should have come as no surprise to the UMass community since there were signs of its approach over recent years. The womens' occupation of the Collegian, the backlash to the U.T.O.P.I.A. death threats against black and gays, Take Back The Night marches, the Freeze Rally, which was ten thousand strong, the co-ed bathroom rallies, the Grenada invasion protest last year: each in its own way contributing to the movement's growing momentum. But in no year since the 1960s have students had as much impact and have impact as consistently as this year. The following is a summary of some of the most memorable events.

September 12. Several students spontaneously gathered and demonstrated against a National Guard Camp at the Campus Pond, where ROTC members were selling sodas to raise money for Easter Seals. Motioning to a helicopter at the site, one of the student protesters, Court Cline, commented, "They say they're raising money for Easter Seals . . . if they sold this helicopter, it would probably solve all the Easter Seals' problems."

September 30. About twenty students participated in an overnight peace encampment at the Campus Pond protesting the deployment of nuclear missiles in Europe and England. The peace camp was inspired by the peace camps at Greenham Common in England and Seneca Falls in N.Y. where thousands of people, mostly women, have camped over the past two years. Organizers also intended to provide an alternative to ROTC recruitment on campus. One said, "They are recruiting for war and we are recruiting for peace and justice."

October 25. Two-hundred and fifty people rallied outside the Student Union to protest the invasion of Grenada a year earlier and to demonstrate against a national celebration of the anniversary of the Grenada event. The seriousness of the students who gathered on this misty, cold autumn day to grieve rather than celebrate was best expressed by one student who said, "We don't want to see young people die in another useless war."

November 2. Twenty or more members of the University Peacemakers marched in a funeral procession from the Fine Arts Center to the Student Union. They listened to music until an Emergency Broadcasting Signal came on and then all fell down to quietly die for about ten minutes. About a hundred on-lookers watched as several of the Peacemakers walked around and traced the fallen bodies in chalk. This was to show solidarity with the students at Brown who days earlier voted to have cyanide on campus to be distributed in the event of a nuclear war, and was part of an effort by 17 campuses throughout the nation. One of the Peacemakers concluded, "It made people stop and think that nuclear war is serious and is suicide."

November 6. Two of a small group of people demonstrating against CIA recruitment on campus at Hampshire House were arrested. One of the arrested students, Perry Anselam, explained, "We are seriously questioning why UMass would allow a CIA recruitment process on campus." Although he was found guilty in court, the judge suspended the sentences in lieu of public service work which both defendants chose to do with the American Friends Service Committee.

December 7. Gay and Lesbian Day attracted hundreds of students to the Student Union for a day of sharing information as well as feelings of support. However, a small number of students let the word out that there would be a counter rally where an effigy representing a gay person would be hung. More than a hundred gay and lesbian supporters marched to protest the counter rally, but no one showed up to represent the anti-homosexual group. Organizers of the People's Gay Alliance were able to convince the counter-march organizers that their planned action was inhumane and oppressive.

January 31. Students returned from intercession to find that there was a proposed plan to eliminate the Board of Governors, an elected student group which oversees student interests in the administration of the Campus Center and the Student Union. About 200 students, waving signs and chanting slogans in support of the BOG, marched to Whitmore and rallied. Following the rally there was a brief sit-in outside the Chancellor's Office. Vice-chancellor Jack DeNyse, who announced the plan, was reported to have said students shouldn't have a role in the management of the Campus Center. That role was given to students by the Board of Trustees in 1972.

February 25. Several hundred graduate students rallied outside the Student Union and marched to the Whitmore Administration Building. Chanting "No way, we won't pay," the grad students were protesting a newly conceived fee of $261 about to be imposed on them as well as the undergraduate student body. Called the Universal Resource Fee, it would be used to pay debts for university services and buildings which most graduates rarely use, such as the dining commons. Sanjiv Dugal, president of the Graduate Student Senate, said that the proposed fee increase would "add insult to injury . . . since grad students are paid less here for teaching than at other schools." More than 250 student signed the Chancellor's guest book before leaving the Whitmore corridors.

April 1. What began as a march in further protest of the proposed elimination of the BOG turned into a five day and four night occupation in the Office of Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs at Whitmore by between fifty and eighty students. Attracting some national media attention and producing a cohesive set of demands, the April 1 Coalition was said by one UMass attorney to be the most poignant student action since the 60s. The five demands were that the BOG not be eliminated, the Universal Resource Fee not be imposed, students have some jurisdiction over the Office of Student Activities, and UMass divest all of its stock holdings from South Africa and companies doing business in South Africa. The fifth demand was that the students not be prosecuted for the sit-in or reprimanded in any way. The administration agreed to let the students go and to form a committee to review divestiture. It also agreed to consider the other demands (the BOG was retained; but the Universal Resource Fee was eventually imposed). On April 4, the students elected to accept the compromise and desist from Whitmore.

April 10. Three students were arrested as others protested a conference in the Campus Center entitled "The Training of and Business Need for Foreign Specialists". Students objected to the presence of Citicorp, which has lent South Africa $250 million since 1979 at less than 1% interest. Two of the students who were arrested for trying to raise an anti-apartheid banner, Beatrix Hoffman and Mark Kenan, pleaded innocent in Hampshire District Court. After Campus Center employees physically removed them, they pointed Kenan and Hoffman out to police who then arrested them. "We weren't asked to leave and they didn't give us any opportunity to leave. We had no desire to get arrested. If they had asked us to leave, we would have left," Hoffman remarked.

April 11. The BOG acted against the Coors Beer Company by banning the sale of the beer on campus, because of the company's alleged anti-union stance and unfair work ethics. The BOG, by its action, joined a national boycott begun by the AFL/CIO last year.

April 29. A student strike was called nationwide to increase awareness of militarism, foreign policy, and apartheid. "No Business As Usual Day" at UMass provided a program of lectures, a peace camp, guerilla theater, films, and a die-in as an alternative to classes which many students boycotted. "The ideas of no business as usual is that you don't go through your daily routine, that you stop and think about what's going on," said one of the rally's organizers.

"No Business As Usual Day", a national student strike, set out to increase awareness of apartheid and other issues.

May 1. Following a report released on April 29, revealing that UMass stock holdings in banks and businesses dealing with South Africa to be even larger than previously thought and recommending immediate divestiture, students again rallied, marched, and staged a sit-in on Thursday, May 2. This time for the four-hour long sit-in at the Goodell office of UMass Treasurer Robert Brand came to an end with the arrest and physical removal of 32 students. It was the largest number of student arrests on campus since a 1968 protest of the Vietnam war.

In addition to these actions on campus, students participated in marches in Boston, New York, and Washington, as well as other actions such as the Draper Labs sit-in, Underwater Systems Center sit-in, Westover Airforce Base, the Federal Building in Springfield, etc., where many students were arrested. And yet there has been little if any media coverage of these events. The above account should give you a better perspective than the Preppie Handbook. Student activism is alive and well in Amherst, Massachusetts.

YEAR IN REVIEW

Video technology gives new meaning to "song and dance"

With the increasing popularity of music videos, the entertainment industry experienced changes that transformed the marriage of music and film from a casual, occasionally successful combination to a multi-million dollar business. Many of the changes occurred in cycles, as the superstars of 1984 in music, movies and television were all but forgotten this year and new talent was discovered by the public.

The connection between music, particularly rock music, and visuals began in the mid-1950s with Bill Haley and His Comets in The Blackboard Jungle and has grown greatly during the 1984-85 year. Motion pictures featured soundtracks performed by popular musicians who used clips from the films in their videos to promote both the music and movie. Success of a band, whether or not it backed a film, often depended on its screen presence and ability to produce sharp visuals.

One of the best examples of this trend is Prince, a musician from Minneapolis known for his erotic lyrics and stage shows. His movie, Purple Rain, reportedly loosely based on his life, received high acclaim for its music sequences but was criticized for its portrayal of brutality toward women. The soundtrack reached platinum status.

Women became a major force in music, led by the comeback of Tina Turner. Private Dancer was Turner's first hit record since performing in the late 1960s with her now ex-husband Ike. In addition to the title song, "What's Love Got To Do With It" was also a successful single. Turner's recent fame gave her the opportunity to co-star in Mad Max: Beyond Thunderdome with Mel Gibson.

Madonna, a 25-year-old singer from New York, received fame for her album and single, Like A Virgin. She became a trendsetter with her fashions and her style was followed by many girls and women who wanted Madonna's "vamp" look. Like Turner and Prince, she also starred in a movie, Desperately Seeking Susan.

However, one of the biggest success stories of the year came from a veteran New Jersey musician. It was no surprise to his many fans when Bruce Springsteen's first album with the E Street Band in four years, Born In The U.S.A., became an overnight hit. The record produced five singles and launched the Boss on a one year tour. Springsteen contributed $10,000 from every concert to aid the area's hungry. Although against having film footage of himself released, he relented and made some videos.

Other rock musicians also helped fight hunger. With the famine in Africa reaching catastrophic proportions, British performers formed Band-Aid and recorded "Do They Know It's Christmas". Proceeds from the song were used to aid famine victims.

Following their lead, 45 American artists responded with "We Are The World", a single written by Lionel Richie and Michael Jackson. The album of the same title was released and included songs from Prince, Tina Turner, Bruce Springsteen, Huey Lewis and the News, and Kenny Rogers.

(Editor's note: Live-Aid, an outdoor festival drawing a crowd of almost 200,000, took place at Wembley Stadium in London and JFK Stadium in Philadelphia on July 13, 1985. The concert featured over 100 musicians, the reunions of Led Zeppelin and Crosby, Stills, Nash, and Young, and Phil Collins' use of a Concord jet that enabled him to perform on both continents. Over $70 million was collected from gate receipts and donations, which were used to develop long range plans to help the African people. Bob Geldof, lead singer of the Boomtown Rats, received much recognition for organizing Band-Aid and Live-Aid and was later nominated for a Nobel Peace Prize.)

phy played a Detroit cop who searches for his friend's murderer in Beverly Hills. Although the plot was considered shallow, Murphy (one of the biggest comedians of the 1980s) and the music carried the film. The soundtrack was just as successful, with songs by Glenn Frey and the Pointer Sisters in the Top 10.

But, a rock star's presence does not guarantee a profit. Sting starred in Dune, a multi-million dollar space epic. The movie was eagerly awaited by fans of the novel, but the picture disappointed viewers and critics, resulting in a box office bomb.

The Breakfast Club was a showcase for the "Brat Pack", some of the most talented actors and actresses of the younger generation. Emilio Estevez, Ally Sheedy, Molly Ringwald, Judd Nelson, and Anthony Michael Hall gave convincing performances as five high school students serving detention. The ability of the cast to portray the stereotypes created by society helped the film to convey life during high school.

Rock was not the only type of music used in movies. Amadeus, based on a prize-winning play about Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, intertwined the pianist's music with a view of his life as seen by adversary, Antonio Salieri (F. Murray Abraham). The movie won eight Oscars including best picture, actor, director and sound.

Television made a transition by incorporating popular music into its shows. Miami Vice became a prime-time cult hit due to its characters, Crockett and Tubbs (played by Don Johnson and Philip Michael Thomas), and original approach to its production and subject matter. Much of the show's success was attributed to music that attracted a large, younger audience.

NBC had another hit with The Cosby Show. Written and produced by Bill Cosby, a graduate of the University of Massachusetts PhD program, the comedian was hailed for his realistic and humorous situations about family life.

Saturday Night Live was once again revamped, with a new cast including Billy Crystal, Rich Hall, Mary Gross and Martin Short. Several characters and segments developed into favorites over the season. Short's impersonations of Ed Grimly (a nerd with a spike of hair protruding from his head) and Katherine Hepburn, and Crystal's Fernando often stole the show. In keeping with tradition, SNL broadcasted television's only weekly live musical performance.

Music has always been visual in the sense that it calls up images in the listener's mind; today, however, that connection has been intensified to the point that the two are inseparable. It is almost as unthinkable to make an album without accompanying videos as it is to make a movie without sound. Video imagery, with its sharp, fast editing, has pervaded every aspect of the visual and musical media, among them commercial advertising and network programming. It will be interesting to see how far these trends will carry the entertainment industry in the future.

“expressions through art”

In the world of art there exists the typical romantic stereotypes that all who study the arts must face and overcome. Yet there also exists the innate pleasure in the work which gives them strength, and the dreams that lay behind their choices make them fight the odds every day, every time they practice their craft. They have a self-discipline unique to their situations, be it physical, or mental; this discipline is learned by loyalty to an inbred talent, an inbred dream that no one can deny, but can only hope to control. They study their craft in search of ultimate excellence, being their own hardest critics while learning from the criticisms of others. They are the masters of mood and the portrayers of ideas and the creators and followers of intangible dreams. They practice ART.

THE FINE ARTIST — THE PAINTER

Some think art is merely throwing paint onto canvas, but to those who have chosen this field, it is not the child's play of the uneducated.

The canvas awaits the brushstrokes that will transform it from its plain, inconspicuous state into a work of art, but the canvas will not be touched until the artist is ready to work. The painter relays an image onto a tangible medium, giving this image eternal life.

Mike Slifkin and Margaret Wiberg work on their paintings.

The fine artist has the power to transform, to create, to transmit an idea unique to his own person in a way unique to his own talent. The subjects of the painter may coincide, but it is the individuality, his style of art and his style of life which he wants to convey.

The quest of the artist to fashion his style begins as a fantasy full of visuals, and ends in reality, in a form of communication, an expression that is ART.

THE PERFORMING ARTIST — THE ACTOR

The talent of an actor lies within his ability to create a believable character that can evoke a response from an audience, be that response empathy, anger, or laughter. The actor must have an awareness of the full spectrum of human emotions from hatred to love to despair to ecstasy. He must reach inside himself and find those emotions most hidden and be able to channel them into another being that he must portray and endure throughout the performance.

The stage, the lights, the costumes, the makeup, and the anticipation have a charm which entices the performing artist to do what he does, and the audience to witness the execution of all these elements in harmony. The desire of satisfaction, from applause or otherwise, indicates the innermost part of the actor, the part which relates to emotion; for it accumulates into a form of expression that is ART.

Boltwood Project - a volunteer student-run organization providing recreation and leisure activities for Belchertown State School residents. The activities include the Special Olympics, coffee houses, arts and crafts, and community programs. Boltwood Project gives students in the five-college area a chance to participate in programs related to career opportunities in human services, psychology, recreation, communication disorders, physical and occupational therapy, nursing, and medicine.

Business Club

Chinese Student Club

Christian Science College Organization - holds regular meetings for all interested students and faculty to share ideas on solving campus problems through prayer. Their activities center on protecting the college community from misconceptions regarding Christian Science, and to share the Christian Science Monitor and its international perspective. As a group they strive to demonstrate Christianity in daily living, and to make college a more enjoyable experience for all.

Distinguished Visitors Program - brings to campus diverse speakers in an effort to enlighten the student community about contemporary issues and cultural affairs. Established in 1959, DVP has worked to stimulate critical thought and debate. This year, DVP presented many speakers, including Edwin Newman, Stephen King, and Bill Baird. Drum is a black literary and arts magazine. Established as a forum for writers and artists of the University's Third World community, it allows interested students to acquire skills in the field of publishing.

Earthfoods - the only vegetarian, student-run restaurant collective in the Amherst area. Its members manage the restaurant while cooking and serving 300-400 people every school day from 11am to 3pm in the Student Union Commonwealth Room. The room is brightened with murals, musicians playing an hour to get a free meal, and a diverse clientele (many of whom are not vegetarians!). Volunteers drop by and work for an hour in exchange for a free meal. The ice machine clatters, the steam pipes hiss, and the tape player booms everything from Gershwin to the Grateful Dead, Motown to the Jam.

East Side Arts Council - open to all students living in the Central, Orchard Hill, Sylvan, and Northeast areas. The Council meets weekly to discuss the arts, and plan future projects. In the past, the East Side Arts Council has sponsored jazz brunches, mimes, theatrical productions, bus trips to study art in New York, and a holiday festival. The Council has also served as a vital force behind the Wheeler Gallery arrangements.

HEARTBEAT

of a Vital Campus

When the overseers of the University planned the $13 million dollar Campus Center in 1968, they wanted to take advantage of a mood of growth and expansion to create a building that would be the center of an internationally renowned university. The Campus Center and Student Union are not only the geographic center of the campus, they are the cultural heartbeat of UMass. When the Campus Center was built in 1969 the effect on the campus was immediate.

Dr. Robert Gage, director of University Health Services in 1971 said that the new building meant an "instant transformation of the campus from a relatively quiet, bucolic atmosphere to that of a bustling and crowded city . . ." With the coming of the Campus Center in the late sixties the face of UMass was changed forever.

The Campus Center/Student Union seems like a city. You can play pinball, shop, eat, sleep, watch television, check out romantic prospects. You can have your hair cut, plan a trip, put up messages on the many bulletin boards, play pool, have your bike refurbished. You can mail a letter, use the 24-hour banking machine, enjoy the view and a drink at the Top of the Campus Lounge.

Students are attracted for a variety of reasons. Many student-run businesses such as the People's Market and Earthfoods are here, as are many registered student organizations. There are several lounges you can take advantage of to catch up on sleep, watch your favorite soap, or read the Collegian.

The mood of the Campus Center/Student Union is always changing, affected most noticeably by the time of day. Early morning is a quiet time. In the Hatch, there are a few bleary-eyed students who stumble around buying coffee and bagels. The noise level is lower than any other time of the day. On the Concourse, the vendors are beginning to get out their wares; the University Store opens. By the time the Collegians are placed in their stands around the Campus Center and Student Union, the day is well under way.

At noontime, the Campus Center Concourse is bustling. Here you can buy anything from heavy wool sweaters to fresh flowers to earrings. You can receive information about the threat of Reagan and the Nuclear Age, the B'Hai Faith, and raising the drinking age. You can send a candy-gram at Halloween or a Hollygram at Christmas or see slides of coffee-bean pickers in Nicaragua or famous 1984 campaign speeches. Dogs, skateboards, bicycles, and wheelchairs are in the crowd. UMass students are always willing to stop and check things out: to price items, to ask questions. It is totally common for strangers to strike up a conversation — about bus schedules, for example, or last night's show at the Student Union Ballroom. The air is full of easy friendliness.

The brisk pace continues into the afternoon. In the Student Union the Ministore is crowded with people buying popcorn and newspapers. The Cape Cod Lounge is always full in the afternoon (soft couches are in great demand on campus!). Sleeping, smoking, and reading the newspaper seem to be the favorite activities.

For many, the Student Union and the Campus Center are not just places to call home between classes. Students and non-students alike are employed by the many student organizations, businesses and shops housed in the Union and Campus Center. Upstairs in the Union there are several offices, including People's Gay Alliance, Student Note Service, and Student Government Association. Downstairs there are Hillel, the Parachute Club, the Post Office, and the Bicycle Co-op. Students here share a sense of camaraderie that comes not just from being UMass students but from being co-workers as well.

The University Store in the Campus Center has an extensive supplies of junk food. The shelves are packed with everything from Cheez Balls to Snickers bars, Velamints to Bubble Yum, Devil Dogs to sour cream potato chips. Traffic around the candy counter is thick — but junk food isn't the only important thing available in the University Store. In fact, the University Store is primarily a book store. School supplies are important, of course, as are cards to send home. A generous variety of makeup, magazines, and UMass paraphernalia abound. The University Store has a large selection of art supplies, as well as staples like Kleenex and toothpaste. You can buy records, cookbooks, jewelry, or a sweatshirt for your little brother. From the moment it opens to its closing in the late afternoon, there is a steady stream into the store.

The rhythm of the Concourse is strikingly different at 5:00 than at mid-day. The TV lounges are cleared out except for a few tired looking souls. The vendors are packing up; the University Store is closed. A few people trickle into the Blue Wall. Campus Center employees are beginning to head home. Only at this time will you find ten (yes, ten!) empty tables in the Coffee Shop. The transition from dusk to nighttime is anything but subtle.

Walking from the Campus Center to the Hatch, it becomes apparent that there is one place where there will always be noise, activity and people: the arcade. Students come here to blow off steam, challenge themselves, and to soothe their overloaded psyches. Though at 5:00 it is considerably more empty than just about any other time, in the arcade is a colorful melange of people, lights and bizarre sound effects.

While the mood at the Coffee Shop at dusk is tiredness, the atmosphere at the Hatch is relaxation, preparation for the night ahead. People are in small groups: talking, laughing, and eating pizza. Everyone seems to be unwinding rather than studying. La Cucina is doing a brisk business and drinking has indeed begun at the bar. Night has begun.

The Campus Center/Student Union is a unifying element in UMass students' lives. It is one thing that we all know, that we all share. It is hard to imagine anyone going to UMass for four years and not going through the Campus Center at least several times a week. No matter who you are, no matter what you study, the Campus Center/Student Union is an integral part of your life. Everyone who walks through the Concourse contributes something of himself/herself to the atmosphere. Having a resource like this breaks down barriers between students. The Campus Center/Student Union is a life-giving force, the very heartbeat of UMass. It's hard to imagine what life at UMass would be like without it. — Margaret George Honors Student Association - created to bring honors students together outside the classroom and to make the "honors experience" something more. The group is open to all students and sponsors a wide range of social, cultural, and academic activities including parties, day trips, conference trips, meetings, and a newsletter, On Target.

Hospitality Management Society - Eta Sigma Delta - the honor society for the Department of Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration. Membership is available to juniors and seniors who have achieved a level of academic excellence and who have been actively involved in the department. Activities include: student tutoring, assisting with class pre-registration, fund-raising, community involvement, and an annual induction banquet for new members.

Hotel Sales Management Society

Hunger Task Force - established to increase awareness of the starving and needy people of other countries. The group raises funds for these people and is also largely responsible for a one day OXFAM fast each semester in the dining commons. This past spring the Hunger Task Force worked with CROP to sponsor a 10 km walk-a-thon.

Index - the UMass yearbook. Designed, written, photographed, and edited by a twenty member staff, the Index is one of the oldest yearbooks in the nation. Established in 1869, the staff works hard to organize and produce the students' and University's only permanent record of the people and events of the year.

Legal Services Office - a student-funded law office which provides free legal services to fee-paying UMass students and student groups. LSO offers advice, representation and/or referral in such areas as criminal, consumer, civil rights, debt collection, housing, university-related and labor problems. The LSO is staffed by four attorneys, two administrative and secretarial support staffs, law students, and during the school semester, six to eight undergraduate legal assistants.

Leisure Studies and Resources Society
Lesbian Union - an organization specifically designed to serve the needs of all lesbians within the Pioneer Valley community. They have office hours every day of the week, and the office is always open to those who wish to talk, sit, listen, or share ideas with other members of the group. All women are welcome, as well as men with questions or information, and all are encouraged to take part in any or all group activities. Located in the Student Union, the group is always happy to help any individual or group in any way possible with the information that they possess.

Marketing Club - provides students with the opportunity to understand the experiences of reputable corporate executives and their businesses through guest lectures. Scholarships are awarded annually to two applicants who have outstanding scholastic merit and have contributed to the academic community. Other activities include social hours, a spring banquet, student-faculty softball game, and movies.

UM Marching Band

— more than a halftime show

The marching band is an important part of life at UMass. The approximately two hundred and thirty member band includes not only musicians but also twirlers, drum majors and the color guard. There is a great deal more to being a band member than just having the ability to play an instrument.

Great dedication is a requirement of each member. Before school begins the band has a week-long band camp. According to band member John Thompson, camp is composed of "long, hard, all day workouts." The members spend all day practicing musical scores as well as marching routines until they are perfect. During the school year, members practice for about an hour and a half Monday through Friday. The practices are described as "tremendously demanding" but also "well worth the time and effort involved." Due to the time element and commitment involved in being a member of the band, band is considered a course for which members receive two credits. Each football game halftime show takes approximately two weeks to learn. All of this hard work pays off in invitations to various events.

This year alone the marching band has travelled extensively along the east coast. Perhaps the most prestigious invitation was one to march in the Inaugural Parade in Washington D.C. (they have been in the last two Inaugural Parades). Also in Washington D.C. the band performed in the Prelude Pageant and at the Pavilion. They travelled to Virginia to play a UMass Alumnae Concert. Two different Pennsylvania high school band tournaments invited UMass to perform at their contests. The band also performed at all UMass football games except three of them. They are also invited to participate in competitions where they usually win an award. Travelling with the band is a major production that includes the use of five buses for the members and a truck for the equipment.

The UMMarching band stomps on home turf.

The concert and hoop bands are smaller versions of the marching band. Marching band members have the option of joining one, both or neither of the smaller bands. The entire band performed at the Multiband Pops Concert in October. The concert band put on a Spring Concert at the Fine Arts Center in May. The hoop band (or basketball band) can be found playing supportively at all home basketball games. As can be seen, the marching band as well as the concert and hoop bands are constantly performing.

Much of the credit for the success of the UMass band belongs to band director Professor George N. Parks. Professor Parks had been directing the band for eight years. In that time the band has performed in two Inaugural Parades plus at various other functions. He is well-liked and respected by the band members. Member John Thomson cites Professor Parks as the reason many members join the band. Yet the best reason students are willing to become dedicated members is for the "sheer fun and enjoyment" band provides.

Peacemakers - an active and growing student organization dedicated to working for a nuclear-free and non-militarist future. They share a vision of a more just, peaceful world where every human life is considered sacred. Activities include educational events on disarmament issues as well as non-violent direct action by which they hope to challenge the present illusion that more weapons equals more security.

People's Gay Alliance - maintains an office/lounge where gay people can relax, meet others, and find out about scheduled events. The PGA sponsors the Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Men's Counseling Collective, which supplies basic peer counseling, information and referrals to anyone who calls or visits. The PGA Speaker's Bureau provides direct outreach to the heterosexual community. They are a group of lesbians, bisexuals, and gay men who, upon invitation, will speak to any group or class. They will share their experience with heterosexism, and how their lives as gay people are affected by society's views. The PGA holds dances each month which average three hundred and fifty people. Services and activities are open to all regardless of sexual orientation.

People's Market - a collective, student-run business. It offers an assortment of fresh produce, bagels and cream cheese, dairy products, canned and packaged goods.

Philopethian Society

Photo Cooperative - a student-run, volunteer business which provides low-cost film, processing and darkroom accessories to the Valley community. Members work two hours each week, usually in sales, and can purchase merchandise at cost.

Radical Student Union - an organization for students who wish to take an active role in shaping the future. They believe that it is not only possible but imperative for people to come together and create positive change through their efforts. The RSU exists as a common ground for people who see deep problems and inequities in our society and who have a vision of a better tomorrow.

Republican Club - the major moderate and conservative political voice at the University of Massachusetts. Through a variety of activities including speakers and rallies, they strive to raise the political consciousness of the student body. More than a political organization, they offer many opportunities for fellowship as well.

The SGA Communications office is also the home of the Circuit, a new student-controlled business which produces a monthly news-magazine for all UMass students.

SGA Judiciary - functions as the judicial component of the SGA. Its duties chiefly concern levying fines on shoplifters from the University Store and arranging for trials involving the Senate and/or any Recognized Student Organization. The SGA Judiciary, composed of Clerk of Courts and the Student Attorney General, coordinates activities for the 18 student advocates (two representative of each area government) and offers advice to students concerning trials or prehearings. The Judiciary seeks to maintain an outreach system for student judges and judicial advocates by sponsoring training seminars on various topics including racism, sexism, anti-Semitism, and legal ethics.

EDO

Sometimes when one passes through the Student Union and sees all the varied student businesses, one may think that they are all completely independent of each other, each its own self-contained organization. But despite their diversity and seeming unrelatedness, the businesses share a common bond: they are all part of the Economic Development Office.

The Economic Development Office is located in the midst of the businesses it connects, at 403 Student Union. It serves as a kind of central bureau for accounting, bookkeeping, and economic advising for the non-profit student organizations. The staff of sixteen students headed by adult coordinator Katja Hahn d'Errico help students regulate the management aspect of their firms. They help the firms manage their accounts, balance their budgets, and enable the money to flow back into products and services that will help the consumer. Despite the diversity of the businesses connected with EDO, the seven accountants that make up the accounting team meet with their fellow students involved in businesses and help them competently arrange their finances.

Many organizations belong to EDO. Nearly all the student-run eating places, including the snack bars at Greenough, Kennedy, Sylvan, Orchard Hill, the S.O.M. Coffee Shop, the Earthfoods Cafe and the Flint Cafe use the advice and assistance of the EDO staff to help with accounting and money management. Many of the student service organizations, like the Bike and Photo Co-ops, TIX, People's Market, Student Note and Printing Service, Teamwork, Redemption, Valley Women's Voice, and the Circuit also utilize the office. A total of sixteen student-run businesses thus far depend on the Economic Development Office.

In the past, EDO has had the image of having a staff composed only of business majors and accountants. But that is changing. They are working at hiring all kinds of people because the student businesspeople are so varied. "We're looking to have a more rounded staff, with more stress in the liberal arts," explains MaryBeth Brown, the office coordinator. Meetings are democratic and those who work there must have an ability to relate well with others and work within a group setting.

Lynne Melilli of the Earth Foods Cafe feels that EDO performs an invaluable service to student organizations. "Most students who run the businesses know very little about the money management end," she says. "The people at the Economic Development Office help us allocate our resources."

EDO tries to establish communication with student-run organizations. Meetings between itself and a student firm occur at least once a week, and in many cases meetings between accountants and student managers will occur as frequently as two or three times a week. EDO keeps all the books for the student organizations and regulates the cash flow. Because the organizations are sponsored by the Student Activities Trust Fund, they must maintain a non-profit profile.

The Economic Development Office is a power behind the scenes of student businesses. It welds student business initiative with practical management knowledge and links diverse organizations while insisting on accuracy and quality.

It is the organization's goal to help provide information and services to students relating to the travel and tourism industry. TTO has invited guest speakers in the industry to come and share their knowledge with the HRTA students. The organization has also sponsored various trips and tours to New York City, Boston, and local businesses. The Travel and Tourism Organization is relatively young but is gaining recognition within the Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration Department as well as the university as a whole. They welcome new members, input and support from all.

Union Program Council - the nation's largest student-run concert promotion and production company. A fixture on the UMass campus for years, UPC has brought a vast array of talent to Amherst. From the Fine Arts Center to The Blue Wall Bar, a wide variety of venues insure a wide variety of acts. Last year, UPC and the Duke Ellington Committee promoted more than fifteen shows, and have utilized at least ten on-campus venues. Being entirely student-run, UPC looks to the student population constantly for support, ideas, and guidance. Any student is welcome to stop by the UPC offices at any time. From artists to engineers, journalists to business majors, and every field of study between, UPC offers experience that can only prove helpful upon graduation.

WSYL has produced five concerts in the SUB with local bands and national acts such as Black Flag and Saint Vitus as well as Outpatients, Pajama Slave Dancers and UMass' own Cirle and Don't Ask. All D.J.'s are trained to broadcast and WSYL provides an opportunity for all D.J.s to receive a Federal Communications Commission license to broadcast.

Zoodisc.

The Student Government Association (SGA) and the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) are two very important organizations whose activities and decisions affect every UMass student. Perhaps their most important decisions are monetary ones as they hold the purse strings to a great number of organizations and can heavily influence some monetary matters.

The Student Senate consists of approximately one hundred and thirty-five student senators from all over campus as well as off-campus. They are elected from the Commuter Area Government, the Greek Area Government, the Residential Area Governments and the Third World Caucus. The SGA president or co-presidents are chosen in a campus-wide election. The other two major senatorial positions are that of the speaker and the treasurer. Both of these offices are filled by elections within the Senate.

The senators are the voice of the students at the University. The responsibilities of the Senate are to make policy recommendations on any question or issue relating to the University, establish and appropriate funds earmarked for student activities, regulate all campus-wide elections and lend and/or withdraw recognition to all undergraduate student organizations. They also are responsible for establishing and regulating all area and residential governments, enacting legislation on social policies regarding campus conduct and student services, and providing for adequate student participation in the formulation of academic policies.

There are seven standing committees in the Senate. Each senator must belong to one of the seven committees which include the Coordinating Committee, the Budgets Committee, the Finance Committee and Governmental Affairs. The remaining three are Academic Affairs, Rent and Fees and Public Policy. The first four committees are internal to the day-to-day functioning of the Senate while the last three are external to its daily operation.

The Senate itself supports campus-wide organizations. These include the following: the Communications Office, the Economic Development Office, the Legal Services Office and Off-Campus Housing. The Office of Third World Affairs, the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA buses), the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), Union Programming Council, Union Video Center and WMUA radio station are also sponsored by the Student Senate.

SCERA is perhaps the Student Senate-sponsored organization most like the Senate. Its main purpose is to work to establish student rights. SCERA is "dedicated to providing research and activism in many different areas." There are four teams which accomplish this: the Women's Issues Team, the Anti-Racism Team, the Jewish Awareness/Anti-Semitism Trainer and Researcher/Organizers.

SCERA is involved in a variety of activities to not only increase social awareness on campus but to also improve life at UMass. Events supported by SCERA to heighten social awareness include the International Women's Event, the Take Back The Night March, the Martin Luther King Week, The Anti-Oppression Media Campaign, the Holocaust Memorial Week and South Africa Divestment. Tuition reports, the academic grievance policy, meal plan flexibility and swing spaces are all confronted or developed in an effort to improve UMass life.

SCERA was developed by the merging of two organizations. They are the Student Organizing Project (SOP) and the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER). Since its founding seven years ago, SCERA has done much for students. It has developed both a sexual harassment and an academic grievance procedure. It is working to improve lighting throughout the campus and has assisted in forming an Escort Service. SCERA's greatest accomplishment was getting this year's tuition increase cut in half from 15 percent to 7.5 percent.

SGA and SCERA are unknown organizations to many students. However, without the services and benefits provided by them, every student would feel the effect. SGA and SCERA govern important areas of a student's life and offer worthwhile services which are seldom recognized until needed.

— Margaret George

Whether planned or spontaneous, the activities we engage in serve as an expression of ourselves. On this campus there exists over 450 recognized student organizations, many of which are featured on the preceding pages. However, students do not have to take part in organized activities to experience the University. A person can interact with UMass through other students, University personnel and the campus itself.

Members of the Mortar Board work to service UMass.

Mortar Board is a National Senior Honor Society at the University of Massachusetts. They exist to "support the ideals of the University, to advance the spirit of scholarship, to recognize and encourage leadership, and to provide service to the campus community."

Membership in the Isogon Chapter of the Mortar Board is based on scholarship, leadership, and service. Members must be at least in their junior year or equivalent status. All must have a 3.2 cumulative average or above and have demonstrated leadership abilities and service to the University and/or community. There are 35 members selected each year; they are then required to serve the society during their senior year.

Activities in the past and present have been to reinstate the Dean's List and work at University functions such as Parents Weekend and the Dean's List Dinner. This year they compiled a University Honors Booklet which included a summary of all the academic honor societies on campus. They hope to make students more aware of the various societies available to them and the goals each one of them pursues.

Distinguished Teaching Awards

The Distinguished Teaching Awards are given to three professors and three teaching assistants. A committee of students and faculty collect nominations, made mostly by students, and accept input from faculty members. Students in the nominated professor's or TA's classes fill out evaluation forms, which are supported by letters from deans and department heads. With this information, the committee selects that year's recipients. Each recipient is awarded $2,000 and a plaque.

The following professors and TAs received Distinguished Teaching Awards in 1985:

Professors

J. Nicholas Filler
School of Management

Louis S. Greenbaum

Faculty Fellowship Award

The Faculty Fellowship Awards honor professors who have contributed greatly to the University in their fields. Nominations, made either by a faculty member for another or by the professor himself or herself, are submitted to a personnel committee. The dean of each college then endorses the nominations of one or two professors to the Faculty Senate Research Council. This council makes recommendations to the Graduate Dean, who selects that year's recipients. Each professor who receives the award is given $3,000 and a year off from teaching to work on interests in their field.

After 26 years, old lessons still ring true

It has been some time now since Bob Tucker died, and I was going to write something about him when I heard of his death, oh yes, something meaningful and undoubtedly something maudlin. I was very good at being maudlin in his class, and have rarely lagged on that score ever since.

He would disagree. He would smile and speak gently not of my faults but of whatever virtues he might have found in me, for that's how he dealt with all of us. Few can do that. Few have the self-confidence to be gentle.

Oh, I was going to write something, but then I saw that others had done precisely that, so I put away the idea. And now I pick it up again. Why now? It's as if some smart-ass spirit of some sort had been hovering about all this time, and prodded me, when I least expected it, with memories.

The first shove was the sort Tucker would have liked because it came from the senses. He had urged us in those Old Chapel classes not just to see and hear, but to smell, taste, and feel, and then recreate from all we had sensed.

Recently my wife and I were guest lecturers at a University of New Hampshire journalism class. We each drew on a quarter of a century of experience. The windows were open to let in some spring air, and those senses got to me. That special sense of a campus in spring, oh, sure. Is this the maudlin part?

Whatever it is, or was, it reached me, and I told the journalism students that one of the most important lessons I ever had learned about my trade was not learned at my trade. It was learned in a college classroom, I told them, and then I told them what Tucker had told us so many years ago.

Robert G. Tucker was an English professor at the University of Massachusetts. He died in 1982.

Use all your senses. What does the place smell like? Look like? What were the sounds? I asked the students to give me the feel of the place. They wrote it down much as I had written it down, perhaps hoping as I once hoped that someday it would all come naturally.

The day at UNH was my first prodding. The second was not gentle, certainly not subtle. Rather it resembled a hokey scene in an unremarkable movie. I had picked up a book and, inside, found an envelope, addressed to me at a Laurel, Maryland, address in 1965. We had lived in that bland suburban community because it was halfway between Washington and Baltimore. Each working day, Caryl, wife and reporter, drove to Washington, and Alan, husband and reporter, drove to Baltimore.

The letter was from Tucker. He had written it on January 27 of that year, four sheets of lined paper, full, but for eight lines at the bottom, of gentility, courtesy, compliments, constructive criticism.

I had forgotten that I had written to him and had sent along copies of some of the stuff I was doing on Baltimore's muggy and sometimes mean streets. I had been so damn proud of those stories, some of them about the people rarely touched then or now by the media.

I had also sent something I insisted was free verse. This too had fallen out of the envelope. It's dated now, but according to Bob Tucker, it wasn't exactly primed to set the world on fire then either.

Once again, in the letter this time, he became teacher. Once again, he did so without being overbearing or pretentious, without hurting the feelings of a young writer. And make no mistake about this — a journalist's ego is much more fragile than a politician's.

Once again, I soared, because this voice from my past was telling me that some of those newspaper pieces were good. And now in 1985, as I re-read this old letter, I glow unabashedly again. Yes, not only is a journalist's ego fragile; it is so large as to be suffocating.

In the letter, Tucker wrote of perspective, of how newspapers, radio, and television really don't deliver a proper perspective. He went on to describe those who see the world as a whole, who see the good with the bad. "They with the grace of God," he wrote, "get us the hell out of Egypt. They write the good news — that it's never too gruesome (they face all the worst) for the most important thing, human love and compassion, to begin rebuilding with whatever fragments seem to be at hand."

Now it hits me. He knew. Tucker knew all the time what some reporters never learn and what some of us take so long to learn. I recall, as a young reporter, that I felt I must concentrate on the bad news, in order to right wrongs. But by concentrating on the bad, we present such a warped view of the world that our readers and viewers lose heart, and, in the process, lose confidence in us also.

It took me so long even to begin to understand that, but Tucker knew. In closing he said of me and of my wife, whom he had not met, "I shall expect a couple of calf-bound autographed copies of your two novels. Make them good news, like this of your remembering me, 6 or 7 years out."

My wife has written and published her first novel, her fifth book. It is humorous and sad, bittersweet and just what Tucker would have liked receiving. I've written three books, but no novels. I'm not sure I know how to do a novel. But I now keep the letter next to my typewriter. I don't wish to lose it again. I'll need it, you see, if I ever try that novel. For I remember him now, 26 years out, and will always.

Depth. Without it, a long season becomes too long, and winning becomes a longshot. Lack of depth in key positions caused the Minutemen to complete a second straight 3-8 season. Coach Bob Stull's promise of "exciting football" gave way to a six-game losing streak mid-season. But a resounding victory over play-off hopeful New Hampshire gave an indication of how strong the team could be with full health.

The season started out with a convincing 26-10 triumph over Ball State ("a team we statistically should have lost to," commented Stull). After dropping games to both Lehigh and Holy Cross — the only game UMass was completely out of — the team bounced back with a 3-0 whitewashing of Northeastern on a George Papoutsidis field goal.

Then came the slump. Rhode Island took a one point win despite George Barnwell's 172-yard effort. Coach Stull said, "It would have been a different story if we had won the game. It was a conference game (one of five), and they are all important." Consecutive losses to Richmond, Maine, and Boston University set the stage for a battle with UConn for the Homecoming Classic. But the Minutemen failed to capitalize, losing 21-16 in newly renamed Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium. After a sixth straight defeat (against Delaware), the Minutemen had the role of spoilers. If UNH won, they would go to the playoffs and hand UMass its worst record in over eighty years.

Barnwell's 111 yards and Carlos Silva's deflection of a sure touchdown pass with 28 seconds left gave UMass a 14-10 triumph in their best effort of the year.

The team was young (only ten seniors), and despite many injuries, turned out some fine performances. Bob Simeone (team MVP) caught 105 passes for 1569 yards, both school records. George Barnwell totalled 931 yards for second place in the conference, while Frank Fay and Duckworth Grange also played well. Jim Simeone completed 147 passes for 1595 yards; and Vito Perrone, Glenn Holds and Paul Platek had fine defensive seasons.

CARRYING ON THE TRADITION

WOMEN'S FIELD HOCKEY

The 1984 edition of the UMass field hockey team was relatively young. Only six players returned from the 1983 Final Four team, that captured third in Philadelphia the previous November. A successful season dispelled any doubts that youth would stall the hard working Minutewomen.

The Minutewomen produced a winning season, and added another NCAA Tournament berth for Pam Hixon, seventh year coach who spent the summer as assistant coach on the bronze medal U.S. Olympic Field Hockey squad.

UMass was ranked as high as fourth in the nation, and although North Carolina knocked them off in the season opener, the stickers ran off an impressive 10-game winning streak against Temple, Virginia, Springfield, and Michigan. Eight of the ten wins were shutouts. New Hampshire, an NCAA quarter-finalist, fell 3-7 to UMass in the regular season.

But UMass didn't get a crack at the Wildcats in the NCAA tournament.

The University of Connecticut, who UMass hasn't beaten since October 1980, closed the book on the Minutewomen's season with a 4-3 triple overtime victory in the first round of NCAA Playoff Action in Storrs; a game decided on penalty strokes.

Megan Donnelly, UM's penalty corner and penalty stroke specialist, gave UMass a 2-1 halftime lead over UConn; but the Huskies came back to take a 3-2 lead before Donnelly's ninth goal of the year sent the game into overtime.

Fighting hard — The Minutewomen played every game with the will to win, continuing their record of excellence.

Donnelly, a junior, scored three penalty strokes this year (BU, UNC, Virginia).

This was the first year that senior co-captain Pam Moryl (seven goals, six assists, 13 points), didn't lead the team scoring. Part of the reason was Moryl's move from forward to midfield; the other was the emergence of freshman Tonia Kennedy, who assumed the scoring reigns with 13 goals, four assists and 17 points. Co-captain Andrea Muccini led a defense that only twice gave up three or more goals. Freshman Lynn Carlson saw the most action in the net with 13 games.

While the Minutewomen didn't go as far as they had in previous years, they laid a solid foundation from which to start in 1985.

THE BEST IS YET TO COME

MEN'S SOCCER

Their accomplishments were many. The men's soccer team posted a 9-8-3 record, which was their best showing in six years. They came into the season unranked, after a meteoric first third of the season the Minutemen found themselves number one in New England and ranked thirteenth nationally.

Highlights of the season included impressive victories over Providence College and the University of Connecticut. Much of the team's success can be attributed to freshman Kurt Manal, from Chateauquay, Canada. Manal, a forward, led the team in scoring with 11 goals and 8 assists, 30 points in all. This pleased Coach Jeff Gettler, as the team had lacked a scoring punch in the previous seasons.

A solid defense and fine goaltending kept the Minutemen a squad to be reckoned with throughout the season. Senior co-captain Mike Runeare and senior full back Mike Rudd maintained an organized back line which, along with keeper Don Donahue, was rewarded with six shutouts.

The Minutemen were disappointed in the UMass invitational tournament. After beating a solid Northeastern team, they found the University of Hartford a stumbling block in the finals. The Hartford game was a very physical one, and proved to be a bad day for the UMass squad. However, Coach Gettler was pleased with the performances of sophomore Paul Serafino, and co-captain Tom Uschok, who earned places on the all tournament team. Serafino and Manal were selected to the all New England team at the end of the

A STRONG TRADITION

WOMEN'S SOCCER

With only five lettermen returning for the women's soccer team, there were questions if UMass could again challenge for the national championship.

There was no question by the end of the season as the Minutewomen posted a 15-3-2 slate and earned a trip to their second straight Final Four, where UMass finished third. UMass also won the New England championship for the second straight year.

It was a young team that knocked off both Boston College 3-2 in double overtime and Harvard 1-0 in the NCAA play-offs to reach the Final Four in Chapel Hill, N.C.

Coach Kalekeni Banda's squad started six freshmen, including All-New England selection Jolie DePauw, the teams leading scorer with 34 points (14 goals), and an All-New England, All-American Kristen Bowsher with 15 points, six goals.

Freshman Cathy Spence, Banda's instant offense off the bench, was the team's second leading scorer with 30 points. Spence set three NCAA tournament records with most goals in a game (three in the 4-1 consolation game win over California), most goals in tourney (five in four games), and most points in a tourney (11 points, five goals, one assist).

The upperclassmen provided the glue that kept the team together. Senior co-captain Lori Stukes was an All-New England and All-American selection for the second straight year. Stukes and junior Sue Bird were named M.V.P.'s. Senior co-captain Chris Taggart ended the season a second team All-New England selection.

Coming Through! Jamie Watson demonstrates her skills against BC., where the Minutewomen went on to a shutout victory.

UMass started off strong with a 3-0-2 slate before being upset by Brown, 1-0. The Bruins, like Harvard who snapped UMass' eight-game winning streak with a 1-0 win a month later, scored first and then played tough, hang-on-to-win, defense.

UMass outlasted BC in a first round NCAA game in Amherst and earned revenge upon Harvard with a hard-fought 1-0 for the Minutewomen's second straight Final Four berth.

The Huskies of UConn stood in UMass' way of three-time National champ North Carolina in the NCAA finals. But the fourth-seeded Minutewomen and unseeded Huskies battled to a 0-0 tie and went into O.T. where UConn scored first. UMass, 1-3 when the opposition scored first, fell behind 2-0 only to pull within 2-1 before time ran out, giving UMass a consolation date with California.

Bird, DePauw (eight-game-winning goals on the year), Bowsher and freshman Carolyn Micheel were named to the All-Tournament team. Only Stukes and Taggart graduates so there should be no question that Massachusetts will be challenging for the NCAA crown come next fall.

A SEASON OF PROMISE

WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL

The women's volleyball team had seven returning players from its 38-16, ECAAC Championship squad of 1984. The spikers were looking to better that performance, relying on powerful blocking and effective passing.

Six-year Head Coach Elaine Sortino had faith in the team's serving ability.

"We will be a strong serving team this year," Sortino projected, "and as the season progresses we should grow to be an even better blocking team."

The spikers opened strongly, losing only two of their first twelve matches. However, injuries to key players hurt the team later in the season.

In the MAIAW State Tournament, the spikers dropped a close match to Eastern Nazarene. In addition, Senior co-captain Patti Grant sustained an ankle injury in the effort. Junior co-captain Sally Maher was also nagged by ankle and knee problems.

The team's season ended on a somewhat sour note. The spikers took fourth place in the ECAC Championships, losing to both the Army squad and East Stroubsberg.

Despite this, the Minutewomen proved to be hard working competitors in all their matches. The team's show of consistent and intense play bodes well for the future of volleyball at UMass.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

The Minutemen, predicted to finish at the bottom of the Atlantic-10 Conference, proved that pre-season polls are never to be believed. The squad capped off its best season in seven years with a fourth place finish (tied with Rutgers), the highest position in the team's history. The club also managed a 9-9 conference record, the most wins ever in league play.

UMass' season was full of excitement. Convincing victories over non-league foes Stonehill and New Hampshire opened the season, and a thrilling triple-overtime loss to the BU Terriers showed the overall strengths of the squad.

After two losses at the Nashville Music City Invitational, the Minutemen faced conference foes for the majority of the season. They rolled over teams such as Rutgers and St. Bonaventure en route to an 11-10 midseason mark, and the home stretch looked to be a battle. Unfortunately, the two most exciting games proved to be losses — a 76-74 overtime squeaker to the West Virginia Mountaineers, and a tough 50-48 decision to the Temple Owls. The club finished out the regular season at 13-14, and dropped a two-point contest to Rutgers in the first round of playoff action.

Individual performances were truly impressive. Bobby Braun averaged 8.7 rebounds to place third in the league. Carl Smith dished out 125 assists to rank fourth in the A-10 Conference. Horace Neysmith paced the team with 14.9 points per game and 9.1 rebounds, and closed out his career with 28 points to rank third in UMass history. And Donald Russell became the all-time school career scoring champ with an early free throw against Temple; he led the squad with 15.2 points per game.

The future looks bright for the Minutemen. See you at the Cage!

THE YEAR WITHOUT THE CAGE

Cage undergoes a face lift

The class of 1988 has yet to experience the full impact of a UMass basketball game. This is because Curry Hicks Cage — where the games are usually held — was closed since late fall of 1984 for renovations. The building was opened first in 1931, and in all that time was never renovated.

Now, however, thanks to a loan to the University Building Authority from student trust funds, the Cage is undergoing a $2.5 million facelift. Although no extra seating is being added, and there are no major structural changes, 9000 square feet of additional space is being added to the south end of the building. This will provide office space, new varsity and visitor locker rooms, and medical rooms, as well as extra storage space. A new ticket office is also being put in that will be accessible from both inside and outside the building.

Among the changes made within the Cage itself are:

1. A concrete floor to replace the existing dirt one;
2. a new track made of synthetic material;
3. a portable wooden floor for basketball games; and
4. new retractable bleachers that will provide more floor space.

While repairs and restorations occurred at the Cage, the men's basketball team had to travel to the Springfield Civic Center for home games. The women's team played their home games at Amherst College, Totman (NOPE) Gym, and Springfield. In order to allow students to continue to attend the games, the University organized buses that ran from Boyden Gym to the Civic Center an hour before game time. Both the bus ride and admission to the games were free to UMass students with valid ID.

Despite these attractions, attendance at games suffered a marked decrease during the 1984-85 school year; many students found the necessity of taking a car or bus to Springfield too much of an inconvenience. Also, the Civic Center did not encourage as much crowd participation as the Cage did; it was too big for the number of fans who attended.

For those students who remember the excitement and energy of basketball games in the Cage, the wait will not be long until the tradition begins again. According to the contractors, the Cage will be open and functioning by December 1985. This means that chanting and cheering — "the Rage in the Cage" — will fill Curry Hicks during the 1985-86 UMass basketball season.

The Cage will rage again

In the late fall of 1984, contractors came to Amherst to renovate UMass's notorious Cage. A person unfamiliar with the Cage might assume that its name was inspired by the structure itself. It looks like a cage.

When asked why the Cage was being renovated, a secretary in a Boyden office laughed. "You've obviously never seen it. It was a mess. Falling apart." The ventilation was poor, the floor was dirt, and the walls were grey and crumbling. A student who'd been there only once said that it looked to her like a "giant, dingy circus tent." Yet another called it "a barn, a real fire hazard." He went on to say that he "thought it was going to fall on my head."

Questioned on their opinion of the Cage, three football players replied, "The place rocks . . . not like a cradle. It rocks. As in a good time." It seems that athletes, male and female, gather in the Cage, despite its dirt floor and concrete, to have a good time.

The Cage, despite its age and appearance, had become yet another "party place" at socially-active UMass. Now that it has been closed for renovations, basketball players travel to Springfield to practice and play their games. Other athletes go to different gyms on campus.

By mid-October of 1985, there will be major changes — but it's still the Cage. And, as one student put it, "The Cage will rock again."

Progress is astounding in the Cage, as a new floor covers the old dirt one.

ENDING ON AN UPSWING

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Women's hoop provided some exciting action at their transplanted home in Amherst College's gym. The 13-15 mark landed them a berth in the league playoffs. Although they suffered an overtime loss to West Virginia, the playoff slot capped-off a good season.

The women faced only eight conference teams out of 28 games and posted a 2-6 league record. Women's hoop differs from men's in that the intra-conference play is limited, with the emphasis on non-league foes and tournaments.

The season opened slow, with early losses to BC and Florida. The first win came in the second of two tournament games at Fairfield, Ct. The Minutewomen won five of six, including a 22-point romp over Vermont, before embarking on an ill-fated trek to Pennsylvania. The ledger showed losses to Temple, St. Joseph, and Penn State, all conference games. But, the team finished strong going 7-3 in the final 10.

Barbara Hebel finished up with a 12.1 p.p.g. in the Atlantic ten (12.8 overall) and started every game. Susan Bertoft led the team with a .481 shooting percentage, and also paced the squad with 11 blocks and 6.9 rebounds per game. Look for the club to increase their size and power next year to finish strong in the Atlantic 10.

VAULTING TO SUCCESS

MEN'S GYMNASTICS

1984 was the year it all came together for the UMass men's gymnastics team. Key performers and overall depth enabled the team to post an improved 7-4 record. In addition, several team members placed first at the New Englands when the team captured the overall championship.

Depth and consistency are two qualities that separate a good team from a great one. The Minutemen had four athletes that competed in all-around competition. These men were the core to the team's success.

In all-around competition participants perform on each apparatus: floor exercise, pommel horse, still rings, vault, parallel bars, and high bar for a total of 60 possible points. The Minutemen had solid performers in the all-around.

Eric Ciconne, a junior, averaged 49.3 for the year. Teammate Roberto Wiel, a freshman, logged in a 51.3 average.

Joe Demarco, another junior, had an all-around average of 51.4. Demarco took the New England title in the floor exercise with a 9.5. Senior co-captain Ken Dougherty averaged 50.0 in the all-around. In addition, his 9.45 took first at the New Englands.

Other New England champs included Tony Sbarra, the horizontal bar champion for the past three seasons. Sharra broke the UMass school record on horizontal bar with a 9.7 effort. Junior Phil Gorgone, took the New England title for vaulting.

Senior Peter Luchini, a strong performer, had a fine showing at the New Englands taking second place in both floor exercise and parallel bars.

The Minutemen finished off the season taking fifth place in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics Championships.

Still rings require tremendous upper body strength and endurance.

LOOKING FOR AN EVEN KEEL

WOMEN'S GYMNASTICS

First-year head coach Chuck Shiebler wanted to bring unity to the women's gymnastic team. The Minutewomen have seen three new coaches in as many seasons, and needed some strong steady leadership. Shiebler fit the bill.

The women posted a 10-6 record. Hampered by injuries, the team managed to pull together for a fine performance in their last dual meet. The injuries, 90% of which were not serious, forced Shiebler to continually shift the line up. The shifting led to problems in team spirit and individual performances.

Jennifer Pancoast, the team's captain, brought consistency and leadership to the squad. Pancoast was, up until the last meet, the only competing senior. She helped to focus the young team, while turning out her own brilliant routines.

Another senior, Abigail Farris, was sidelined most of the season recovering from knee surgery. Farris, however, was instrumental in choreographing routines for the team.

Two sophomores stood out this season for their hard work and dedication to the sport.

A SPLASHING SUCCESS

MEN'S SWIMMING

The men's swim team blazed to an 8-2 record this season, pulling third in the New England Championships.

The season was particularly satisfying as UMass has not placed in the top three in New England since the 1930s and were eighth last year.

"We did really well," Coach Russ Yarworth said. "We won six New England Championships, and set five New England records. All the guys did a fine job — it was a team effort."

Drew Donovan was superb. He won the 100-yard, 200-yard, and 500-yard freestyle; and broke the league, meet and pool records in the 200, clocking a time of 1:38.

The team really pulled it together this year. Tough practices developed the team into a force to be reckoned with. Hard-working Yarworth was honored as 1985's Charles E. Silva Coach of the Year. The award winner is chosen by other New England Intercollegiate swimming association coaches.

The team radiated unity and it paid off. In the New England's, the 800-yard freestyle relay team of Donovan, Jim Flannery, tri-captain Paul McNeil, and Craig Fuller glided to a first place win. Fuller also smashed league, pool, and meet records with his 1:50.07 effort in the 200-butterfly.

The future looks bright for the men's swim team. This season they showed how hard work breeds exciting swimming.

Taking The Plunge — UMass diver Jean Cowen hits the water in competition with Mount Holyoke. The Minutewomen captured this meet with an 88-52 victory.

The women's swim team came into the season determined to make the best of their situation. They had a new coach, Bob Newcombe, who faced a largely inexperienced team. During the season, however, the team pulled together through hard work and strong leadership.

The team matured during the season. Although their record stood only at 3-9, the individual improvement was remarkable. Senior Elizabeth Barrett started without having competed on the collegiate level. Her hard work brought her to the finals of the New England Championships.

Also at New England, senior star Elizabeth Feinberg captured the 200-yard freestyle championship. The 400-yard and 200-yard freestyle relay teams came in fourth and fifth, respectively. The New England Championships were a high point for the swimmers.

The team has a lot of potential, in both the current freshmen and next year's recruits. With the experience of this year behind them, the strokers will be back, working hard and swimming hard.

CLUBBED DOWN

SEVEN SPORTS LOSE VARSITY STATUS

Tennis captain John Sommerstein fought hard to keep tennis at a varsity level.

In May 1984, the Athletic Department decided to discontinue funding seven varsity sports. These sports were men's and women's tennis, golf, skiing, and mens' wrestling, all of which had previously been funded through the $63 athletic fee that every student pays. The athletic fee is scheduled to increase to $84 in the 1985-86 year.

When the decision to cut the sports was originally made, the Board of Trustees set up a temporary funding schedule so that most of the sports would be funded through the 1986 season. Wrestling, however, had its last meet in March 1985.

Although the cuts will save the Athletic Department approximately $75,000, the real issue is not the economics of the decision, according to Athletic Director Frank McInerney. It was decided to cut the funding of the seven sports because the money available to them was not enough to keep them on a truly competitive level. The money saved will be used to make other sports stronger, especially basketball, football, and lacrosse, all of which have larger followings than the sports being cut. Some students applauded the administration's move, as it will enable the "major" sports to offer more incentives for talented high school athletes to come to UMass.

It was argued by the members of the teams affected, however, that the funding they had was quite adequate to keep them participating at a highly competitive level. The women's skiing team won the league championship for the 13th year in a row this season, and the men's team placed 7th in the nation. Men's tennis had a record of 7-4, and one of the members of the wrestling team, Chris Lee, was ranked tenth in the nation. The men's golf team took first place in the Salem State Invitational Golf Tournament, and was ranked fourth in the state.

Members of the teams affected worked hard to protect their sports.

John Sommerstein, captain of the men's tennis team, went to great lengths to have the decision reversed. He went before the Athletic Council, of which he is a member, but his request that men's tennis remain on a varsity level was turned down.

After that setback, Sommerstein helped to put the question on a campus-wide referendum. The question was phrased as follows:

Do you feel that the Athletic Fee (which will be increased next year) should be used for funding so that the men's and women's tennis, skiing, golf, and men's wrestling [teams], will not be demoted to club status starting with the 1987 academic year? Posters saying, "SOS: Save Our Sports", appeared all over campus. The day before the vote was taken, May 7, a rally was held in front of the Student Union at noon to generate support for the seven sports. The rally consisted of singing, entertainment, and speeches urging passersby to vote "yes" on the next day's referendum.

When the votes were tallied, it was found that the referendum had passed with 80% voting for the Athletic Department to continue to fund the seven sports. This, however, was a non-binding referendum, and the Athletic Department could not be forced to abide by it.

GORRILLA WARFARE

MEN'S LACROSSE

Although the men's lacrosse team, commonly known as the Gorillas, appeared to have a disappointing season, it was really more of a rebuilding season. Since last year's team graduated quite a few seniors, this year was spent giving the Gorillas the playing time they needed to discover their potential.

Strong attackmen were Mike Fiorini and Ken Freeman. Tom Aldrich, Mark Stratton and Gerry Byrne were excellent as defensemen. Gerry Moreau held the team well at the goalie position; and Ed Boardman, Bubba Sanford, Seamus McGovern, Stephen Moreland, and Kelley Carr added great support to the team.

Despite the mishaps of the season the Gorilla's had terrific fan support. The fans cheered them on at every home game as they packed the side of Boyden field doing the wave and enjoying the sun. Excitement ran high as the season closed with a game against top-ranking Syracuse. Spirit was high, but tempers flared as the game progressed, and UMass lost in the last minutes of the game. But this is where they proved just what kind of team they were, taking on the number one ranked lacrosse team in the nation and giving them a mere one point victory (12-11).

Since the majority of the team were sophomores and juniors, next year's team has the potential to have a great season.

SHOOTING FOR THE STARS

WOMEN'S LACROSSE

The women's lacrosse team, better known as the Gazelles, had an exceptional season this year. They started out the year with a tremendous winning streak. According to Coach Pam Hixon, they like to start out each game with a quick score. Several times this season the Gazelles scored within the first minute of play.

UMass had a talent for putting the ball into the net with great proficiency. All-American Pam Moryl had an excellent season. She scored at a fantastic rate and was the Gazelles lead scorer.

Bunny Forbes was also an exceptional scorer as well as assister this season. Becky Bekampis and Liz Schueler were there with some helpful assists and a few of there own scores as well. Both Andrea Muccini and Kris Kocot played well in the backfield. Mary Scott played well offensively with Debbie DeJesus who did an incredible job as goalie.

The Gazelles participated in the East Coast Athletic Conference post-season tournament. They're looking forward to another good season next year with the returning members of this year's team.

ON THE UPSWING

BASEBALL

What more can be said about a team that ended their season with more wins (26) than any other baseball squad in school history? A team that was plagued with injuries and managed to finish second in the Atlantic-10 Eastern Division? A team that broke numerous school records?

The season started slow, the team limping back from tourney play in Florida with a 3-6 slate. But the A-10 games would prove to be the club's mainstay. They took two of three from Temple and swept a trio from St. Joseph's as they moved into the heart of the season.

UMass dropped opponent after opponent with formidable displays of power such as a 20-0 drubbing of Boston University. But the pitching held; a split with New Hampshire showed only three runs given up (the team finished with a 5.61 ERA, compared with the opponent's 6.99).

The bats ended strong down the line, as UMass won its last six. Northeastern fell twice, and a season-ending pounding of Holy Cross showed the world that the Minutemen were indeed a team to be reckoned with.

Stellar individual performances and shattered records abounded. Senior Dan Clifford led the team with a .414 batting average. Todd Comeau pounded out 62 hits and 57 RBI's, and tied Angelo Salustri for the club lead in homers with nine. His 181 career hits broke the former record of 157. Salustri finished with a .335 mark, and Comeau ended at .383. Bruce Kingman stole 26 bases, and his team highs in doubles (13), runs (50), and walks (52) set season records. The team batted .327 for the campaign, another UMass mark.

For the pitching staff, Matt Sheran led all hurlers with a 2.59 ERA. Bob Kostro notched 34 strikeouts en route to a 4-1 mark. Jon Martin, Steve Allard and Jeff Jensen also had four wins. The pitching as a unit landed 198 strikeouts, with eight complete games, eight saves, and two shutouts.

SOFTBALL

The final record of 25-23-1 does not indicate all of the pride and hard work that went into the softball team. This was a young team, with four juniors, four sophomores, and seven frosh.

The team struggled with errors and injuries, only to rally at the end of the season. Six players were named to the All-New England teams.

Pitching was the strength. Junior co-captain Lynn Stockley set a new earned run average record (0.53), breaking teammate Cathy Reed's 1983 mark of 0.90. Reed, frosh Lisa Rever, and Stockley also combined to set a team ERA low of 0.97, breaking Stockley and Reed's frosh mark.

Defense, although shaky early in the season, matured. Martha Jamieson, at first base, and sophomore Debbie Cole (third base) were named to the New England first team, along with Stockley and junior Sally Maher (center field), who rebounded after a poor start earlier in the year.

But, the star of the infield was Carol Frattaroli, a sophomore second baseman. She was named All-New England and tabbed for the Atlantic 10 all-conference team for the second consecutive year. Frattaroli also made the A-10 all-tourney squad with Maher and Reed.

Reed was named as the A-10 all-confer-

Stockley also made all-conference for the second straight year as did Frattaroli, and both were named as co-MVPs at the team's annual spring banquet.

The year, highlighted by wins over UConn, Sacred Heart, the first earned run off hurler Debbie Fidy, Rutgers in the A-10, Rhode Island, and knocking off Adelphi ace Julie Bolduc in 12 innings in the season's finale, will serve as a building block for the 1986 team.

The women's ski team posted another league-leading season this winter. Paced by Sophomore Kathy Smiley, and Captain Sue White the Minutewomen proved to be the best of the "flatland" college teams. The Minutewomen have been conference champs for eleven seasons.

The men also looked sharp this winter, beating a strong Boston College Eagles squad at the Brown Carnival. The men have strong skiers in Dan Conway, Jonathan Segal and Bob Faigel. The Minutemen have captured top conference honors for the last sixteen consecutive years.

Coach Bill MacConnell has worked with UMass ski teams for 26 years.

Although the possibility of losing funding for next year loomed on the horizon, the men's tennis team had a good season. The team posted a 6-4 record, with big wins over Providence, MIT and Springfield.

Wayne Peterson, Earl Small, Flicka Rodman, Dave Singer and Captain John Sommerstein showed their strengths for the Minutemen in singles competition. The doubles teams of Jeff Brady and Paterson, Rodman and Singer, and Paul Zaretsky and John DeKlerk also played competently. Coach Manny Roberts commented that he had expected the team to do well this year.

A SEASON OF REBUILDING

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Smash! This tennis player is silhouetted as she prepares to serve the ball.

Despite their hopes, the women's tennis team did not have a fantastic season this year. Both of their wins (the season record was 2-6) came in the last few weeks of the season, against Rhode Island and Mount Holyoke College. They placed sixth out of ten competing schools in the Atlantic-10 tournament, which was held at Penn State.

Coach Ned Norris realized early on that they would not do as well as he had hoped. He looks forward to recruiting some new young talent, and anticipates a better season next year. However, unless funding is found from some outside sources, there will be no team after next year. Women's tennis, along with six other sports, will be reduced to club status after the 1985-86 season.

The Men's Outdoor Track team this year did not have one of its best seasons. The team, though talented, lacked the age and experience needed to carry it far. This was, however, expected; it takes time to build a championship team. Head Coach Ken O'Brien said of this year's performance: "The whole season unfolded pretty much the way we thought . . . we're a young team — freshman and sophomore oriented — but we have a lot of potential. All we need is one year of seasoning and experience, and the kids can start to advance."

Unlike other teams at UMass, the track teams do not participate primarily in meets against only one other school. (The only 2-school meet this year was against Dartmouth, which UMass lost.) Instead, the team goes to large regional meets or invitationals, where athletes compete as individuals. Sometimes, but not always, there will be team scores calculated, and participating schools will receive place rankings. At the large end-of-season meets, UMass men's track performed respectably, placing 11th out of 41 competing teams at New Englands, which were held at MIT. UMass also placed 2nd out of 13 at Easterns, which were held at Central Connecticut College.

The women's track team had a fantastic season. Every member of the thirteen-woman track team qualified for the New England Championships. Sue Goldstein, Kayla Morrison and Barbara Cullingham set a school record in the 1600 meter relay with a time of 3:48.05. Senior co-captain Leah Loftis ran the 800 meters, at the fastest time Coach Banda has seen in his five years as the UMass coach, with a time of 2:10.5. Loftis worked hard in an attempt to qualify for the NCAS championships. Senior co-captain Maureen O'Reilly had a personal best of 3:38.5 in the three quarter mile medley. Sally Howes and Chris Pratt ran personal bests in the 1500 meter run. Debbie Duffy threw the javeline 119 feet, 10 inches to qualify for the New England Championships. This year's team was invited to both the Penn Relays and Fitchburg State Invitationals.

HIGH HOPES

WOMEN'S GOLF

Considering the circumstances, the UMass women's golf team had a respectable season. Along with six other sports, this team is being "phased out" of its varsity status, and as a result had a great deal of difficulty putting together a team that could perform competitively on an intercollegiate level this year.

However, they did do well enough to come out of the season with a 4-7 record. The victories were against Dartmouth and Springfield college, both of whom UMass defeated twice.

Life Of A Second Semester Senior

A time of quiet study is shared by these two students.

Joe is an average second semester senior. He is a business major, likes to party, hang out with his friends, listen to the Grateful Dead and skip his classes. Joe has been responsible and dedicated to his studies for the past three and one-half years, but all he wants to do is enjoy his last semester. No more boring classes, getting up early and trudging across campus. He only cares about passing his courses. Joe suffers from senioritis.

Janine, Joe's girlfriend, is an intense microbiology major who wants to attend medical school. She realizes the importance of keeping her nose to the grindstone. Although a good student, Janine is nervous about her chances of being accepted at Tufts.

On registration day, Joe and his new roommate, Cornelius, party at the Drake. Cornelius is a freshman statistics major, so Joe gets a fake ID for him and they spend the afternoon drinking. Meanwhile, Janine waits in line for a psychology class she must pick up. She needs only one more D core to graduate, but after a two-hour wait, she is told that all the psych courses are full. Discouraged and desperate, she signs up for an anthropology class. Joe told her not to worry, that many people have taken ethnomusicology and passed it easily.

The semester goes by fast — the last one always does. Janine applies herself to her studies, since she has a genetics quiz and three lab reports due every week. However, because the CATE guide reported that ethnomusicology was a gut course, the professor decided to change the course's image and increase the workload. As for Joe, he is making one of the biggest decisions of his college career. He's trying to decide if he should support a campus ban on Coors beer or drink it anyway.

As an SGA senator, Joe becomes so upset with the Student that he proposes to replace the senate with a monarchy. The proposal was put on the agen-

Spring Break arrives. Joe and some of his friends leave for Florida while Janine stays in Amherst to get ahead on her work. She is glad she did not go when Joe came back with sunpoisoning and $200 worth of speeding and parking tickets. His car was towed twice and the engine overheated somewhere in North Carolina. In addition to this, Joe remembers that he has an accounting exam the next day and has no idea what material will be covered.

After Joe fails his exam, Janine drags him to the Campus Center to have their senior portraits taken. When the proofs come back a few weeks later, Janine is happy with hers, but Joe's face is covered with blotches from the sunpoisoning. Janine, busy studying for four exams and one quiz in two weeks, forgets to send back her proofs in time and doesn't get to choose her favorite pose for the yearbook.

Not for the first time since he's been at UMass, Joe decides to spend a quiet afternoon by the Campus Pond. On his way by the Student Union, he walks into the middle of a protest. Before he realizes it, he's carrying a sign and marching with the crowd to Whitmore. The next morning, Joe's picture is splashed on the front page of newspapers across the country.

As graduation approaches, Joe started to think about his future plans. Through the University Placement Services, he signs up for interviews with NASA, Lord & Taylor, Nabisco and the Envi-pants, a t-shirt and a sports coat. The interviewer is impressed by Joe's individuality and hires him on the spot.

Three days before graduation, Janine receives a letter from the University that says she must still fulfill one C core due to an incomplete she received in a course freshman year. After pleading with the professor, she is allowed to finish the course, and ends up with an A.

The following day is Senior Day. Joe and Janine have a great time with their friends, but both feel sad. They know it will probably be the last time they see some of the friends they have made at UMass.

And so it ends. Graduation comes and goes, marked by a hangover for Joe and tears for Janine. As they walk out of the crowded, litter-strewn stadium to meet their families, they grin at each other. "We finally made it!"

On Sunday, May 5, the Southwest Area Government sponsored a day-long outdoor concert, an event that was the high point of Southwest Week 1985. Bands played more or less continually from noon until 6:30 p.m. The lineup was as follows: Nexus opened the show, followed by the all-woman band Girls' Night Out. Otis Day and the Nights, known for their appearance in Animal House, ended the day with some rock and blues. People

The Union Program Council, better known as UPC, every year sponsors a concert by the Campus Pond which is open only to Five-College students. This year the event attracted approximately 7,000 students, who partied and danced in front of the stage from noon until 8 p.m. Elliot Easton of the Cars opened the show, followed by Texas blues singer Johnny Copeland. A funk act, the SOS Band, played next, and then a pop group, the Tubes. The concert started 90 minutes late and was never brought back on schedule, but no one seemed to mind too much.

SENIOR DAY

Senior Day is always a great way to wind down after a long, hard, final semester.

This young woman is going to be badly sunburned by the end of the day.

The event allowed a chance to mingle with friends, old and new, making farewells and exchanging plans for the future.

On the last day of finals every spring semester, Senior Day occurs. That year's graduating class congregates by the Campus Pond to listen to live music, eat (food supplied by Food Services), and drink (beer supplied by the students) from early afternoon until evening. The event is free for seniors; their friends and guests must pay. This year's Senior Day was sunny and warm, and seniors flocked to the Pond, shaking off the tension of exams and saying goodbye to friends.

Ribs, barbecued chicken, and salad were the order of the day.

After several awards were given out, the principal address was given by Dennis Brutus, a South African poet who had been exiled from his native land in 1966. Degrees were then conferred upon the class of 1985, and the graduates officially became alumni of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

STUDENT SPEAKER

Ellen M. Ryder

When I was young I had a little Irish grandmother named Agnes Finnegan. My grandmother never had the opportunity to go to college, but she taught me about what she knew best — how to deal with the opposite sex. Her homespun Irish proverbs stay with me: "If he's good to his mother, he'll be good to his wife." "If he's cheap with his money, he'll be cheap with his love." Agnes Finnegan, in her simple wisdom, gave me a rich education in human relations. She taught me to judge people by the way they behave toward others.

Four years ago, a freshman class entered this University when Chancellor Henry Koffler proclaimed the Year Toward Civility. It was a year of learning and growing with people of all races and cultures and lifestyles. Our class was offered a special opportunity and charge. We were asked to learn about each other. We were asked to open up our minds and shake free pre-conceived notions about all people. Yes, we were asked to learn about each other.

To learn means to persist in asking questions. A true scholar of life will not construct a thesis until he or she has undertaken another's burden or listened to the yearnings within another's soul. If we were to name the prerequisites of an educated life, we must include the respect for nature, the acceptance of diversity, the empathy with all humankind, and the genuine love and cultivation of ourselves. There is nothing that cannot be learned from our daily routines. There is no impression that cannot be made, no bias that cannot be eased, no soul that cannot be gladdened. If we are truly educated people, we are required to wrestle constantly with ignorance and apathy. Only the most solid confidence in ourselves can steel us against threats to our right to learn. We must suspect any narrowness of mind, for to learn, the mind must be open. We must question every opinion we hear and not accept blindly. To sink into neutrality would be to take for granted the privilege of our education. Our own "civility" toward others is based on our willingness to learn about them.

Amelia Earhart once wrote that "Courage is the price that life exacts for granting peace." If it takes courage to devote one's mind to learning, it takes even greater courage to devote one's learning to peace. Our charge, as we choose our destinations, is not only to make a life for ourselves, but to make life better for others. Our education invests us with the powers of choice and reason.

Our integrity gives these powers voice. To choose a simple path, one which allows us to observe but not to partake in life, is to choose absenteeism from the human race.

My fellow graduates, today I advocate life participation. Our education is not over until we stop asking questions. We must share the knowledge we have earned. We must raise our hands to every challenge and every injustice we find. Do not be afraid to raise your hands against discrimination, abuse, or racial bigotry. Do not be afraid to raise your hands against inequality to women, starvation and homelessness in our land, or threats to the sisterhood and brotherhood that must exist to maintain our race. When you speak out, speak in earnest and with sincerity. As Black writer Mari Evans urges:

"Speak the truth to the people
Talk sense to the people
Free them with reason
Free them with honesty

In keeping with the formality of the occasion, graduates celebrated with bottles of champagne instead of their usual beer.

Journalism/English major Ellen Ryder was chosen by the Office of Student Affairs to give the student speech at Commencement.

Free them with Love and Courage and Care for their being."

How will our participation in life be measured? We will not, as in the past four years, have to stay up all night cramming to succeed the next day as people. Our friends, coworkers, parents and even grandmothers will not evaluate us with letter grades. It is our responsibility to grade ourselves, to re-evaluate and to make changes. Where do we begin?

First, we should refine the art of forgiving ourselves. When we falter in our education, we cannot go on until we recognize our own human limitations. Failure, too, is an educator. It is best accepted with grace and a sense of humor.

Secondly, as educated people we must habitually question our own characters for content and clarity. We should ferret out our prejudices and lay them bare for scrutiny. To judge others too harshly is to poison our credibility. To judge ourselves too harshly is to poison our self-esteem.

In finding our own success, we must define the word for ourselves. If money is what you seek, do not seek it at another's expense. Hire an honest accountant. If honor is your goal, climb out of the muddle of other people's ambitions for you. Join the Peace Corps or write a best-seller, but never lose sight of why you are doing it. If success for you means to be content with yourself, you may have attained it already. Look into yourself. Listen to yourself. Separate your own voice from the hundreds of other voices you will hear in a lifetime. Once you have set your course for success, you can invent proverbs to tell your grandchildren. You, like Agnes Finnegan, can leave them with a legacy of wisdom.

Here is the first of many "summing up" times. Here is the gathering of four years of experience. We stand here and survey all that has come to define us. What is our next step? We may find ourselves walking in the wrong direction at times, but the true tragedy lies in standing still. Anyone who has a conviction and does not act on it takes a step backward. Only in stepping forward can we look behind and see how far we have come.

Fellow graduates, I congratulate you and I celebrate with you our entry into another realm of education. May you take what you have earned at the University of Massachusetts and shape it with your hearts and minds. May you impart new understanding to your children and grandchildren. I leave you with words passed down for generations in the Osage Indian tribe:

"Footsteps I leave here sacred and fertile

In footsteps I leave here, corn starts to sprout

In footsteps I leave here, shoots sway in the wind

Springing up from the earth."

May the footprints you make in your lives be deep and firm and fruitful.

From the editor

The yearbook that you have before you is the result of much time and effort on the part of the 1985 Index staff. We worked hard to produce a book that alumni, students, and the University could be proud of and we believe we have succeeded. We hope you are also satisfied with your yearbook and our attempt to express the changes that occurred during the year.

The past year was one of growth for the Index. Key members from last year's staff returned. With other new editors, writers and photographers, the yearbook expanded from 288 to 312 pages and became more copy-oriented. Features, captions and photo credits were added, which kept pace with a trend toward a magazine-style format.

The New England College Yearbook Workshop, sponsored by Jostens, taught us new design, managerial and marketing techniques. It helped raise staff morale, which was low in the spring due to budget problems with the Student Government Association.

Last September, the Index continued the fight from the previous semester over funding with the SGA. The book finally received the money necessary to produce the 1985 edition by a unanimous vote on a motion to give the Index a combination grant and loan and the support of thousands of students.

However, the book was once again denied funding in March for the 1986 fiscal year. Through working with Dianne Rossi, SGA treasurer and Stacy Roth, co-president, a funding alternative was developed so the Index could be maintained next year and eventually become self-sufficient.

Unity, cooperation and communication were stressed throughout the year. A yearbook cannot be produced by one person; team effort is essential. This year's staff worked well together and they deserve the credit for the content and quality for the 1985 Index. I'd like to thank the following people for their help:

Kim Black, I would have lost my composure several times if it weren't for your calmness and advice. You're probably the most organized person I know and you kept the office mess down to a minimum, except for what was on my desk. I'm sure you will do well next year as editor of the 1986 Index.

Connie Callahan, your strange sense of humor was amusing on those late, late nights in the office. I'm grateful that you found a place for us to live while we finished the book in June and even more grateful for your commitment to the sanctity of the Index. Good luck as managing editor of next year's book.

Margaret Carr, you maintained accurate business records, something which has not been done in years. Kim and I will never forget the night you made dinner for us, although we laughed much more than we ate. You will be missed next year.

Bobby K, what you did not know about layouts you made up for in creativity. You had excellent ideas and designs and the arts section turned out better for it.

Martha Brennan and Heidi Lieblein, the team you made was unbeatable. Not only did you have good composition and communication skills, you gave the sports section some much needed levity. The staff looks forward to your returns for the 1987 book.

Deb Mackinnon, Brad Morse and Evie Pace, all of you worked hard to take, develop and print the photos that section editors screamed for before each deadline. It was a high-pressure job but you pulled through. The photography was great and you deserve the recognition.

Gayle Sherman, your eye for small details drove the publisher and our rep crazy. You were creative with your section, but please watch out for those maintenance men next year.

Judy Fiola, you only began as a photographer in the middle of the year, but your candids saved Connie and Jill from missing their deadlines. You came through for the spring concerts and graduation. I think you should copyright your "Fiola Fotos".

difficult but worth it in the end. With all of the experience you've gained, your third year on the staff should be easier.

Linda Somma, the public relations director was a new position and you did well with it. Your press releases were fun and hopefully made a few more people aware of the Index.

Thanks also go to Lauren Gibbons, Sandy Harlow and Andrés Claudio. The groundwork you did as assistants to the editors helped them to make their deadlines and not feel quite so pressured. You were greatly appreciated.

Three other people had much input into the direction of this book. Don Lendry, the Jostens representative, was a guiding light. He helped in times of crisis and has become a good friend of the staff's. Our advisor, Dario Politella, was a constant source of ideas and information. I've never known anyone with so many slogans, theme concepts, and marketing techniques. Last, but not least, the great Norm Berimo, the representative from Yearbook Associates, put considerable energy into taking photos and overseeing the senior portrait program. The waitresses at Fitzwilly's and the Pub will long-remember Norm's antics. The Index would not be the same if it weren't for the time and effort these men gave to the book.

The 1985 Index is finally done. It's hard to believe that something which takes so long and is so difficult to produce is now completed. I hope the Index expresses best what you remember about the 1984-85 year and that you will enjoy the book for many years to come.

Sincerely,

Cynthia A. Orłowski

Colophon

Volume 116 of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, INDEX, was printed by Jostens Printing & Publishing in Topeka, Kansas using offset lithography. The 3,000 copies were printed on Jostens 80# gloss. Out of a total of 312 pages, 29 were printed in four process color. All color separations were made by Jostens Laysen Scanner from color prints.

The Craftline Embossed cover was manufactured by Jostens Cover Plant in Topeka, Kansas. The maroon lexatone material was spanish grained and mounted on 150 pt. Davies Red Label binders board. The title and date on the front cover were hot foil stamped. The design on the front cover and spine were silkscreened with grey #356.

The triple-gatefold front endsheet was printed in four color process. The color photo was taken by Jim Logue of Yearbook Associates, Turners Falls, MA.

Type, main text and captions were set in Times Roman. The headlines varied with each section.

Senior portraits were taken by Yearbook Associates of Turners Falls, MA.
